PREFACE.

MY best thanks are due, in the first place, to my friend Mr George Barnes of the Inner Temple, and when I say that he laboriously made and generously gave me that index of personal names which will add much to the value of this book, it will be seen that I have good cause to be grateful :--also to Mr J. M. Rigg of Lincoln's Inn for having copied (very carefully as I afterwards found) some thirty pages of the manuscript at a time when I was otherwise engaged :---also to Mr James Greenstreet, who has long known the manuscript, for some useful suggestions:---to the gentlemen who have charge of the Public Record Office, more especially to Mr Walford Selby, for many courtesies which have made my days among the rolls very pleasant :- to Mr Hampshire the Librarian of Exeter Cathedral for a copy of a deed relating to Bracton's place of burial, which he kindly sent to me :---to Mr Melville Bigelow of Boston and Professor Thayer of Harvard for the encouragement given me by friendly letters from a land where Bracton is at least as well known and at least as highly honoured as he is in England:—and lastly to my friend Mr Frederick Pollock who has been ready always to listen to and generally to answer my questions, and from whom I first learnt to find an interest in the history of law. That the idea of connecting this book with Bracton was due to Professor Vinogradoff of Moscow, I shall explain below, and indeed this will be plain enough from the letter of his, which (by the permission of the editor of the Athenaeum) is here reprinted : but I must add that in 1884 and again in 1886 I had the happiness of talking over his discovery with him.

When I say that I am not satisfied with the form in which the Note Book is here made public, this is no conventional protestation. Down to the last moment I have found so many faults in my own work, that I cannot but believe that there are many yet to be found. Down to the last moment I have been learning many things about the law of the thirteenth century which I ought to have known at the outset. For sins of commission no excuse shall be offered, for none should be accepted; but before I am blamed for having done less than might have been done in the way of collating rolls, giving various readings, making indexes and notes, it will I hope be remembered that this has been a private enterprise. I have often had to count the cost; also to reflect that another day in the Record Office or the British Museum would mean another hundred miles in the train. So the reader gets no facsimiles of the manuscripts; he gets an index where he should have had a digest, perhaps a translation; the luxury of cancelling sheets instead of confessing some stupid blunders, has been denied me, and I am sure that there must be more to be learned about Bracton's life than I have been able to discover: at this eleventh, nay thirteenth, hour I. find what I believe to be his marks on a roll of King John's reign (Coram Rege Roll, No 18). But as his treatise had lately been edited at the expense of the nation, and as there was no learned society whose business it was to encourage the study of English legal history (for the Selden Society was not yet born nor even thought of), it seemed likely that the Note Book would remain unprinted for many years, unless some one would make such an edition of it as could be made at his own cost and without giving to it all his time. Perhaps I was not the man for the work : but I have liked it well.

p. 22, l. 6. The nunnery is that of Sinningthwaite in Yorkshire. Monast. vol. 5, p. 463.

p. 25, 1. 2. The reading was originally per breue Regis J. (by a writ of King John); the annotator turned J into ingressu; seemingly in so doing he made a mistake.

p. 25, Case 30. I misunderstood this case. Jacob, the deforciant in the assize, vouches Benedict, but the voucher is not allowed because Simon, the plaintiff, claims to hold of Jacob. Andrew, Jacob's father, 'incumbered' the tenement by enfeofing Swanild, Simon's mother; so Benedict, Jacob's lord, is not bound to warrant Jacob against a claim arising out of this 'incumbramentum'. Bracton, f. 261, deals with just this point.

pp. 39, 40, Case 43. I misunderstood this case. In a mort d'ancestor the parol does not demur for the nonage of the defendant, if his ancestor entered as guardian in chivalry. This seems admitted. The case however apparently decides that it is otherwise when the land is held in socage; here the lord can have no business to enter on his tenant's death; if he enters he is a mere intruder, and there is no fiduciary relationship between him and the socager; therefore if he enters and then dies seised, the parol shall demur for his heir's nonage. This provokes from the annotator the exclamation 'Nota, mirum propter socagium!' He thinks it strange that in any case the parol should demur for the nonage of a person who has entered claiming (though not really entitled to) guardianship. In the marginal note for quam petit iniuste read quamuis iniuste.

p. 49, 1.8. For fuerunt read fuerint.

p. 52, l. 18. The MS. has quo, but it should be quod.

p. 121, l. 15. ceperunt uadia sua; this merely means that the bailiffs took distresses (gages) from them. I thought that in connection with cloth uadia might mean woad.

p. 138, l. 5. The name must be Crunes.

p. 297, l. 19. For Thome read Thomam.

p. 340, Case 420. The Longueville in question is in Normandy between Isigny and Bayeux. p. 341, l. 16. For qui read que.

p. 369, Case 469. The paruum breue in question was the vicontiel writ of nuisance, as to which see F. N. B. 184.

p. 373, l. 7. For Reginaldi read Reg', which probably stands for Regis; see Case 1764.

p. 404, Case 516. Curryc is not Southwick, but Cowick near Exeter, where was a cell of Bec. Monast. vol. 6, p. 1043.

p. 490, l. 17. By ipse Peter means himself. He asserts that his own son has better right than William.

p. 506, note 4. Seemingly I was wrong in supposing that the marriage was consummated before the gift was made.

p. 533, note 4. For defendant read demandant.

p. 534, note 8. The point is this:—A father gives the marriage of his son to X; X must get the son married during the father's life, for otherwise the father's lord will be entitled to the marriage.

p. 656, note 4. This must mean, not 'until the land shall be at peace', but 'until the land shall have acquitted itself', i.e. probably, until the land shall have repaid a sum of money for which it has been made security.

p. 666, l. 16. nisi iudicium illum incumbaret (corr. incumbraret). I have given a very bad explanation of this. The king insisted that each of the rebellious barons should come to the court alone, and should go home alone, unless the judgment of the court should incumber, impede, him. Of course in case judgment should go against him there could be no talk of his going home; he would be 'incumbered' by the judgment. Bracton has a similar passage on f. 119. An accused person who is willing to answer the charge 'libere debet recedere, nisi indicium ei incumberet'.

p. 16, line 25. The first pre in this line should be pro.

p. 33. In the heading, for FILIUS read FILII.

p. 132, Case 1115. Selden refers to this case in his Notes on Fortescue; Note 8; I owe this remark to Prof. Thayer. In line 9 on page 133 the words on the roll, which the copyist of the Note Book reads as et verbis, should be in omnibus.

p. 305, note 1. I withdraw the remark that the name Munegedene scems a corruption of Muntbegun.

p. 427, note 1. For Alice read Agnes.

p. 450, line 6. For reognoscendum read recognoscendum.

p. 468, line 1. For producati psa read producat ipsa.

p. 566, note 2. More probably this means that if any one gave judgment in the wapentake the king would hear of it.

A LETTER OF PAUL VINOGRADOFF PRINTED IN THE ATHENAEUM FOR 19 JULY, 1884¹.

It is well known that the chief importance of Bracton's work on the laws of England is derived from the fact that it is based on a most extensive and careful study of the judicial practice of the thirteenth century. Building on this firm foundation, Bracton was able to produce a treatise which in arrangement, connecting theories, and even in many a particular point, testifies to the influence of Roman jurisprudence and of its mediaval exponents, but at the same time remains a statement of genuine English law, a statement so detailed and accurate that there is nothing to match it in the whole legal literature of the Middle Ages.

The great English judge did not content himself with setting forth in a general way what he held to be the law of his country; he used systematically the rolls of Martin of Pateshull and William of Raleigh, and gives no fewer than 450 references to cases decided by his predecessors and teachers. This being so, it is surely not devoid of interest to inspect rather closely that groundwork of Bracton's treatise, and to trace as far as possible his way of selecting and handling his records. Now I think that a British Museum MS., numbered Add. 12,269, can help us very materially in this direction. It is a collection of cases written about the middle of the thirteenth century, with a good many notes on the margin. The first leaves and the last quires are missing, and there is no direct evidence as to the person who compiled and used the book, but the contents make it very probable indeed, if not certain, that it was drawn up for Bracton and annotated by him or under his dictation.

If we leave aside the comparatively few instances when Bracton's treatise gives only general references, and take the quotations specifying court and year of the trial, we shall see at once that they may be classed under three heads': 1. Cases tried in the King's Bench, ranging from Michaelmas, 2 Henry III., to Easter, 18 Henry III.; 2. Cases before the King's Council, from 19 to 24 Henry III.; 3. Cases tried in the Eyres of Martin of Pateshull and William of Raleigh during the first half of Henry III.'s reign. There remains a certain, very small, number of stray quotations which do not come under this classification; as, for instance, casual mentions of trials Coram Rege in 31, 32, 38 Henry III. They probably did not belong to the original text of the treatise; but even if they did, their occurrence does not alter the general arrangement.

Now the Add. MS. contains: 1. Cases tried in the King's Bench ranging from Michaelmas, 2 Henry III., to Easter, 18 Henry III.; 2. Cases before the King's Council, from 19 to 24 Henry III.; 3. Cases tried in some of the Eyres of Martin of Pateshull. Unfortunately the MS. breaks off right in the middle of a Staffordshire Eyre, so that we cannot judge how far the other circuits of Martin and those of William of Raleigh had been used. But even what is left is quite sufficient, as I take it, to establish a remarkable coincidence between the book and the Add. MS. (A Patent Roll² of 42 Henry III., quoted by Madox, 'History of the Exchequer,' ii. 257, enjoins Henry of Bracton to surrender the rolls of M. de Pateshull and W. de Raleigh which he had been using.)

The extracts, 1 ought to mention, are made in a very irregular fashion as regards the order of rolls and terms. The compiler did not go by strict chronology, probably because he had not the whole set of records at his disposal at the same time. So we find that after a series of King's Bench terms of the second, fourth, sixth, seventh, and ninth years, earlier rolls come on again. What is more, there are occasions when a roll from which extracts had been made was taken up again, and some new cases copied out from it¹. The last is a very important feature because it explains a fact which at first sight seems to tell against the supposed connexion of our MS, with Bracton, namely, that not all the cases mentioned in the treatise are to be found under their respective years in the note-book. As a considerable part of this seems to be lost, we cannot expect book and treatise to fit completely.

Passing from a general survey to a closer examination of the contents, we must, of course, advert principally to the subjectmatter of the marginal notes in the MS. Are there any striking analogies between their wording and the text in Bracton's treatise? Most of the notes give only in a few short words the substance of the transcribed cases or call attention to particular points in them. But not seldom the annotator criticizes the decision or supplements it by reflections of his own, and then the close relation between note-book and treatise becomes apparent.

An instance is afforded by the passage on the right of a widow to bequeath crops growing on the land she held in dower. Previous to the statute of Merton, 20 Henry III., such a bequest would not have been valid. Bracton, 'De Legibus,' folio 96 b, says: "Nova superveniente gracia et pronisione.....poterit uxor de fructibus et bladis sine a solo separata fuerint, sine non, testari et pro-uoluntate sua disponere." The Add. MS., folio 209 a, has: "Modo mutatum est de noua gracia quod potest testamentum facere de blado firmo in terra²."

On 169 b of the note-book we find the following peculiar illustration: "Terminus terminans set indeterminatus et incertus, et ideo liberum tenementum sicut ad vitam hominis, quia nihil certius morte, nihil incertius hora mortis." The same diction occurs in the treatise, folio 27 b: "Si autem fiat donatio ad terminum annorum, quamvis longissimum, qui excedat vitas hominum, tamen et hoc non habebit donatorius liberum tenementum, cum terminus annorum certus sit et determinatus, et terminus vitæ incertus, et quia licet nihil certius sit morte, nihil tamen incertius est hora mortis³."

The whole disquisition about the natural and artificial, the common and the leap year, given in the treatise, is set out at greater length, but with a literal repetition of some characteristic sentences, in the note-book (195 b). The quaint comparisons of the year of 365 days to a bird without a tail and of that of 365 days and six hours to a bird holding its tail in its mouth occur equally in both texts⁴.

Speaking about the marginal remarks and insertions of the Add. MS., I must not omit to notice a very important feature in their composition: it is evident that they were written at very different periods. After the collection had been compiled the person for whom it was made seems to have gone through it two or three times. Two observations lead me to this conclusion. Some of the entries, especially where additional matter has been inserted on blank pages, are in distinctly later handwriting (for instance, 196 a). A note has been added sometimes where originally there was only a "N^a" to show that the passage deserved special attention. This peculiarity explains the presence of one or two writs which do not occur in Bracton's treatise (195 b), and seem to have been especially inserted because they did not occur there².

Another point requires careful consideration: among the marginal notes of the Add. MS. there is a certain number of references to cases, mostly very incomplete, jotted down by the annotator from general recollection, without any attempt at definite quotation. One can fancy that in reading through the report of a trial of 1227 Bracton was struck by its similarity with a case which had come under his own personal knowledge, and wrote down in the margin: "fere casus Cole" $(40 \ b)^3$. A very good instance is given on 185 b. The text recites interesting pleadings of some peasants trying to vindicate their right of ancient demesne tenantry against their lord. The note says: "N^a de villanis Henrici de Tracy de Tawystok qui numquam fuerunt in manu Domini Regis nec antecessorum suorum et loquebantur de tempore Regis Edwardi coram Willelmo de

 2 This refers to Case 1290, in which some hypothetical pleadings in a mort d'ancestor arc discussed. Bracton docs not deal with the exact point which they raise. See below, p. 91.

Wilton." The entry seems to refer to a trial of 47 Henry III., which, however, took place not before W. de Wilton, but before Middleton and Brewes (transcribed in a Coram Rege Roll of Michaelmas, 7—8 Edward I.; cf. Placitor. Abbrev. 270)¹. Unfortunately so many of the original rolls have been lost and the indications of the British Museum MS. are so general that it was impossible to trace out most cases in the way of such direct comparison.

But there were other channels. The Patent Rolls give the appointment of justiciaries to try particular assizes, and the Fine Rolls record payments received for such appointments by the Exchequer. These documents give the approximate time of another marginal case. Fol. 276 a has the following entry opposite a Yorkshire assize of Martin of Pateshull: "Na easum Hugonis filii Wymund de Ralegh primogenitum et postnatum qui fuit infra etatem de concordia inter cos facta, coram II. de Bratton." Wymund of Ralegh was still alive in 1256, as is shown by a final concord between him and Warin of Ralegh in the King's Bench (Feet of Fines, Devon, Henry III., N. 492). In 1259 Bracton is appointed to try an assize of mort d'ancestor between Hugh and Warin of Ralegh, and that is most probably the case hinted at in our MS. (Patent Roll, 43 Henry III., membr. 13, dorso)². In most instances the connexion could not be so clearly ascertained. Still, the examination of the Patent Rolls is instructive even where it does not lead to the absolute identification of particular cases, because it narrows the range of possible identification to a very small area in space and time. To put it briefly, they point to Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall as the counties, to Henry of Bratton as the judge, and to the years 42-46 of Henry III. as the time with which the cases of Ralph of Arundell, Corbyn, and the heirs of Hokesham, mentioned in the note-book, are connected. Of course, there is evidence to show that the earlier parts of Bracton's treatise were composed before 42 Henry III., but the work as it presents itself does not look at all like a completed one, and nothing shows that it was not in process of elaboration in some of its parts as late as 46 Henry III., and even later.

Last, but not least, there is a definite trace left by the marginal cases of the note-book in one of the most important

MSS. of Bracton's treatise. It may have struck many students of the author that parallel to the carefully arranged quotations from early rolls there runs a string of irregular references to later cases. A trial is mentioned, for instance, to which the heirs of John of Munmuth were parties. Now the said John died immediately before 12591 (Roberts, 'Calendarium Genealogicum,' i. 73), and so the casual illustration has been taken from a case fresh in the remembrance of the author when he composed the corresponding part of the treatise. The case Roger de Regni r. Robert de Shute, entered as a heading to one of the paragraphs in the editions, is nothing but a similar side reference to a trial which may be still read at the Record Office on an assize roll of Bracton for 1254 (Coram Rege, Henry III., N. 96, m. 4). And so in the work itself we have the like marginal illustrations as in the note-book, and a careful collation of the MSS. of Bracton would bring them easily out in their original character of side-notes. Now, one of the most interesting among the Bracton MSS., Digby 222 in the Bodleian Library, of which that wondrous production called Sir Travers Twiss's edition of Bracton does not take the slightest notice, gives as marginal references two of the most conspicuous illustrative instances of the note-book, the Corbyn case on the subject of warranty and the Ralph of Arundell case.

Summarizing briefly the evidence in respect of Bracton's connexion with the note-book in the British Museum, I lay again stress on the following points: 1. The abstracts from rolls in the Add. MS, and the rolls which served as material for the drawing up of the treatise are substantially the same. 2. There are passages in the treatise which even in their wording connect themselves with notes in the Add. MS. 3. The illustrative references in the Add. MS. can be traced in some instances to Bracton's own practice, and in two cases are found to recur in MSS, of Bracton's work.

My paper has grown to such an inordinate length already that I do not venture to hint at the importance of the matter collected in the British Museum MS. It seems sufficient for the present to say that the note-book gives a copious and careful selection of cases from the early practice of Henry III.'s time, and that many of the rolls from which it was compiled have been lost since. I intend to discuss some of the material questions arising from the study of these abstracts in the new quarterly which the Oxford Law School is going to start next year¹; but even now I think it may be said without fear of going wrong that the integral publication of the MS, would afford the most fitting sequel to Palgrave's editions of Richard I.'s and John's rolls.

I must not omit before concluding to thank Mr W. Selby, of the Record Office, for the kind and valuable help which I had from him on several occasions during my inquiry.

NOTE ON THE CLASSIFICATION OF THE EXTANT PLEA ROLLS.

The yet extant Plea Rolls of Henry the Third's reign are arranged at the Public Record Office in three classes, (1) Coram Rege Rolls, (2) Assize Rolls, (3) Tower Assize Rolls or Tower Coram Rege Rolls. This arrangement has been determined partly by the fact that in time past some of the rolls were preserved in the Tower and some at Westminster. That a roll is now found in a particular class, is by no means a sure indication of its real nature, for instance, it may happen that one of two duplicate rolls will be among the Coram Rege Rolls and the other among the Assize Rolls. Therefore in citing a roll as Coram Rege Roll No. 91, Assize Roll M. 2, 3, 1, or Tower Roll No. 4, I imply nothing as to the character of the roll, but merely give the reader a name whereby he may obtain the document to which I refer. In citing a particular membrane of a roll, I refer to the figures which have been set upon its membrates by a modern pencil.

MSS. OF BRACTON'S TREATISE.

Note :---The following MSS, of Bracton's treatise I have occasionally consulted, and some of them are referred to in my Introduction by means of the letters here assigned to them. It should be understood however that the order in which they are here mentioned, is not an order of merit or of date, also that at least twelve other MSS, are known to exist, at seven of which, those in Lincoln's Inn, Gray's Inn, the Temple and Trinity College, Cambridge, I have glanced.

INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. Of Bracton his times and his work. Generalities.

THAT Bracton's book on the laws of England is a good Bracton's and a great book very worthy of careful study, is no novel and make opinion, but rather an old tradition which has stood the test and received the sanction of modern scholarship.

In truth that book both marks and makes a critical moment in the history of English law, and therefore in the essential history of the English people. About the middle of the thirteenth century, the time when Bracton was at work, our common law, the law which was to be common to Power and England and vast lands of which he never dreamt, was under under rapidly and definitely assuming the shape that it was to keep Henry III. but little changed for long ages. Yet a little while and Parliament would have come into being as the one proper organ of all legislation, hampering by its masterful but fragmentary and intermittent statutes any further development of unenacted law, jealous of the royal power, jealous lest new writs, new forms of procedure, should mean new laws made without its approval. At latest before the death of Edward the First the main outlines of the common law would, we may say, be drawn once and for all; an intricate superstructure might yet be reared, the ground plan could no longer be changed. But during the first part of the reign of Edward's father, the king's judges must have enjoyed such an opportunity of moulding a powerful, practical scheme of law as has rarely been given to men. Past history, the Norman conquest, the vigour of king after king, the ill success of every revolt, had decided that we should have one common law for the whole of England, that it should be the law of one great central court and that court the king's. Verv truly had the king become the fountain of justice. Other springs there had been and were, communal, seignorial, ecclesiastical, the ancient courts of the shire and the hundred, the manorial courts, the Courts Christian. These, had our history been not quite what it was, might have become effective and independent sources of English law, or of manifold local customs. As it is, we, accustomed for centuries to our centralized royal justice, are apt to make too light of these old courts, to think of them only as they were in the last stage of their decay. In Bracton's day they yet flourished. The feudal jurisdictions were dearly prized and obstinately defended; the Great Charter had but lately protected them against royal invasion. Attendance at the county court was a burden, but a burden that knights of the shire would willingly bear if thereby they could check the proceedings of the king's professional judges. The tribunals of the church were zealous and ambitious, eager for work. Still by one means and another, by royal writs invented as circumstances required, the king was getting into his hands a monopoly of justice, was holding himself out as ready to intervene at any stage of any action and to draw the matter into his own court. We can not quite say of him in the wellknown words that he was "over all persons and in all causes "ecclesiastical as well as civil within his dominions supreme." That was not the theory of the time. The ecclesiastical courts were not his courts, nor had he power in spiritual matters. That those courts obtained and retained exclusive cognizance of such (as they seem to us) purely temporal affairs as testamentary causes, is enough to show, were other proof wanting, that royal justice had at least one active rival. There were two swords; the king grasped but one. Still he had succeeded in setting to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction definite bounds. These bounds if we think them wide. were none the less thought far too narrow by the elergy of the day and were only maintained by the unremitting vigilance of the royal judges. But, for all this, the king's justice had a large field and behind it was power not to be withstood.

If however history had decided that the English kingship Royal power limited by should be a very strong kingship and in particular that the law. king should have an active control over all the justice in his realm, still a strong kingship is no absolute monarchy, and history had decided also that the king must judge according to law. Whatever danger there may have been that his court would be merely a machine for enforcing his personal will and pleasure was at an end, at least for a time. Happily, as it now may seem to us, the vast power of Henry the Second had come to the hands of John. Tyranny had provoked revolt and the charter was won. Happily again the revolt was not too successful, and happily the crown passed from John to a boy but nine years old. The minority of Henry the Third made it possible to distinguish between the impersonal 'Crown' and the little crowned head. Law could not be just what pleased this child. Quod principi placuit legis habet vigorem :- without much untruth this phrase might be applied to his mighty grandfather, though rather perhaps as a statement of plain matter of fact, than as a theory of the English kingship. Under Henry the Second, whose will had a way of making itself law, the writer whom we call Glanvill could at least hint that these famous and to a mediaeval lawyer almost sacred words were literally true in England¹. Bracton plays with them and turns their edge. Alongside the king, indeed above the king stands the royal law that makes him king². This let the king obey; so doing he loses no whit of majesty or power, becomes subject to none but himself. Our Blessed Lady, even our Blessed Lord were thus obedient to the law for man³. A constitutional theory not yet embodied in definite institutions found expression for a while in the glittering paradox that submission to selfimposed law is the supreme feat of God's Omnipotence-

INTRODUCTION.

A little later, perhaps before Bracton had done writing, something less mystical had become received, or at least probable, doctrine. The shiftless policy of the self-willed king set men thinking:—the king has peers and he who has peers has superiors¹. But from the time when John, forced into a solemn covenant to deny right and justice to none, had set his will against his word and died a miserable death, (and it was just to this moment that Bracton carried back his search for precedents,) above the king there was evidently law².

The judges are learned. From the same time it is that we first hear of judges in the king's court who are learned, professionally learned in the law of the land. It was still the part of all who aspired to be aught in church or state to do a good deal of judging. Not only in their own manorial courts but as justitiarii Domini Regis assigned to take assizes or hear pleas of the crown, earls, barons and knights, bishops and abbots decided causes and passed judgment. But by slow degrees the king's court (curia) was becoming distinct from the king's council (concilium); the work of hearing lawsuits was being separated from the general business of governing or helping to govern the country, and it was felt that study and book-learning, something more special than an ordinary experience of public state of his text is at present so bad that the loss of a few words may perhaps be suspected; but I have looked fruitlessly at many MSS. in hope of finding a variant. If how-ever, as seems likely, he does take cum as a preposition it does not necessarily follow that he is guilty of a stupendous blunder. It is in-credible that he should not have known and been able to construe the last words of the passage. I see here rather a playful perversity than a mistake. Similar dealings with the text of a book yet more sacred than the Institutes were not uncommon, half-sportive half-serious twistings of holy writ. See Selden, Diss. ad Fletam, cap. 3. sec. 2, and Hallam, Middle Ages, ed. 1837, vol. 2, p. 459.

life, were needful for those who term after term were to sit in a certain place, in aliquo loco certo, and declare the law. Let us indeed remember, that Englishmen have never admitted in theory or in fact that none but a lawyer is fit to judge his fellows. Theoretically our highest court of law is an assembly of lords spiritual and temporal, while very practically at quarter sessions and petty sessions is much justice done by those whom lawyers call lay-men. Throughout the middle ages the unprofessional element in our judicial constitution was strong and healthy, keeping common law at one with common opinion, preventing any wholesale adoption of an alien jurisprudence. But still from the beginning of Henry the Third's reign there were in the royal court learned judges, most of them ecclesiastics, who were making for themselves fame merely as great judges. Foremost among them there was Martin Pateshull, 'a man of 'wondrous wisdom and very learned in the law of the land¹.'

And 'the gladsome light of jurisprudence' (to use Coke's Lawasubject fine phrase²) had dawned in England as elsewhere, an idea of law as of a reasonable system of connected principles, providing in advance for all possible cases, a proper subject for doubt, disputation, proof,-and yet no mere ideal existing only in the speculations of doctors and scholars, but the very law of the land, of which ordinances, charters, writs, decisions, ancient custom, wonted procedure, were authoritative though partial manifestations. Practice and theory had grown side by side reacting on each other. The concentration of justice in the king's court, the evolution of common law, were but one process. That the development of legal doctrine was rapid, we may easily see as we pass from that strange dark book the Leges Henrici Primi, through Glanvill to Bracton. But theory did not outgrow practice. Much had been and was being learned from civilians and canonists. The canon law was of vital importance to all Englishmen, to the laity as well as the clergy. The king's professional judges were, as already said, ecclesiastics deeply interested in the church's law. Appeals to Rome were not uncommon and the English suitor might have to secure the services of the best Italian jurists, of Azo himself. But cosmopolitan tendencies were held in check by practical necessities. The king's justice was conquering and to conquer, but a regard, at least an outward regard, for ancient tradition, an adherence to settled forms and precedents, were conditions of its success; nor could it always succeed without concession and compromise. Our English lawyers seem from the outset to treat the Roman law much as our church treats the Apocrypha; it is instructive but not authoritative; in other countries these leges scriptae prevail; our leges are non scriptae; English law is English.

Growth of law not procedure.

New writs.

On the other hand the common law was not yet a hampered by struggling captive netted in the meshes of procedure. What in after times made it the most elaborate of labyrinths was the closed cycle of original writs, the catalogue of forms of action to which naught but statute could make addition. Now during the earlier part of the thirteenth century the king's general power to make new writs seems unquestioned, though protest, armed protest, may be made against a particular use of that power, specially if it interferes with the feudal jurisdictions. And many new writs must have been made. Of some we know the history. This was made by William Raleigh¹, that by Walter of Merton². But as the struggle for a parliament drew near, as King Henry forced on that struggle by attempting to govern without chancellor, treasurer, or justiciar, complaints of new and illegal writs became loud and the general principle was drawn into debate³. Bracton, writing some few years before the open outbreak, has left us a transitional doctrine. New original writs can be made as occasion may require, for wrong must not be without remedy; in strictness such new writs should be approved by the whole kingdom, that is, by the magnates; but the consent of the magnates may be taken for granted; they consent if they do not expressly dissent, and it behoves the king to give remedy for every wrong¹. A fiction of this kind could not be permanent and events decided that the requisite consent of the common council of the realm should be a real consent. Thenceforward the common law was dammed and forced to flow in unnatural, artificial channels. The supremacy of Parliament may have been worth the price paid for it; none the less the price was high.

² The Old Natura Brevium (f. 122 b) ascribes to him the Quare elecit infra terminum as to which see Br. f. 220. See also the entry in Rot. Cl. vol. 1, p. 32 b, which makes the writ of entry sur disseisin a writ of course. The whole system of writs of entry was rapidly developed without legislation.

The state of things at which we have glanced, the The time for a great book. powerful court, the yet flexible law soon to lose its flexibility, will, if duly considered, seem very worthy to be the theme, very likely to be the cause, of a great book, one which in declaring law will make law for ages, which will leave a distinct mark on national history, which will be read with interest when six centuries have passed away.

And the man who came to the work was able, very able The praises of Bracton, we must say if we compare him with his successors. We look back at them and him and he stands a head and shoulders taller than them all. Just so long as his influence was powerful lawyers could produce such fairly readable books as those which we call Britton and Fleta; serviceable compared with his epitomes, what is good in them is Bracton's. One fact about successors. them let us note. Bracton, we may safely say, did not fulfil the whole of his splendid plan. In the middle of an account of the writ of right his book stops short and then we have what looks like a brief fragment on the personal actions. Britton and Fleta carry their accounts of the writ of right to the same point, and then they too stop short. No one could finish that book: there was no one to bend the bow fallen from the master's hand. There come things which hardly may be called books, the Henghams, Fet Assavoir, the Old Natura Brevium, the Novae Narrationes, useful things in their day for practitioners, but showing no interest in legal principle, no grasp of law as a whole, merely a care for the details of practice, for the tithes of mint and cummin. In its last hours the fifteenth century is redeemed by Littleton's Tenures. Against "the most perfect and absolute "work that ever was written in any human science¹" nothing shall here be said, for it is a masterpiece; but still it is a small thing to set beside the heroic work of Bracton. Littleton, again, had neither rivals nor imitators. English lawyers could make abridgements; write books they could not or would not. As to the chaos of Coke it is bad chaos as it stands; what it would have been but for Littleton and Bracton one does not like to think. It is strictly true what Lord Campbell says, and Lord Campbell cannot be charged with mediaevalism: Bracton "was rivalled by no English juri-"dical writer till Blackstone arose five centuries afterwards"." Twice in the history of England has an Englishman had the motive, the courage, the power to write a great readable, reasonable book about English law as a whole³.

Comparison with foreign writers unprofitable.

We may more easily and more profitably compare Englishman with Englishman, than Englishman with foreigner. In the thirteenth century the task for the writer on law was very different in different countries. Bracton was placed in favourable circumstances. He had to describe the most vigorous system that Europe could show. As an engine of masterful justice for the government of a large land, the court of our king had not its equal. Nor was the Englishman hampered by dead texts. He had but to describe what was really being done day by day and done on a large scale. It is almost useless therefore to attempt a weighing of his merits against those of his French and German contemporaries, Philip Beaumanoir, for example, or Eike of Repkow, or against those of the Italian doctors. Still we may take this from foreigners, that when we set our legal literature beside that of continental Europe it is not of Bracton that we need be ashamed.

If for one moment we set his book beside the Customs of Beauvais and the Saxon Mirror one fact worthy of note stares us in the face. The Englishman's work both in its Practon and Roman Law. general structure and in many details has been influenced by Roman jurisprudence. Really if we place ourselves in the thirteenth century and look only at the surface of things, it must seem very likely that England will soon adopt Roman law as a whole, while into Northern France and Germany it will make its way but slowly or never. After the event we can see why such a prediction would be foolish. The development in England of a centralized royal justice was rapid, precocious. Before the end of the thirteenth century the system with its stubborn writs and formulas had become too osseous to be much modified by new outlandish learning. And looking closer we see that Bracton had no intention of supplanting English by Roman law. It is Rationalism rather than Romanism that he learnt from Azo's book, and this fact that at an early date English law was rationalized by an able man, is not the least among the causes which protected us against Romanism in the following centuries.

Trying to state in general terms, (this is no place for His debt to particulars,) what was Bracton's debt to the civilians we may estimated. put it thus:-First he had learned certain wide principles of jurisprudence, had found some of the highest premisses of all civilized law expressed in neat and accurate phrases. For these, at least for some of these, the England of his time was ripe. They are not, he might argue, specifically Roman; the Romans themselves regarded them as common to all mankind; they are dictates of reason implicit in all law.

> Justinian's Pandects only make precise What simply sparkled in men's eyes before, Twitched in their brow, or quivered on their lip, Waited the speech they called but would not come¹.

Then there are instances in which rules that are less general and more specifically Roman are adopted, or rather proposed, as solutions for concrete cases. For the more part this is done very modestly and by way of suggestion. There being no English authority in point, why, Imperious Caesar dead and turned to clay Might stop a hole to keep the wind away.

But his main debt is less palpable, for what he has converted to his use is spirit rather than substance, not these or those rules, but a method of reasoning about law, of perceiving the interdependence of rules, of making them take their places as members of a body. He is at his very worst when he copies matter from Azo, as he does very freely in those parts of his book, which, being the first, are unfortunately the best known. He is there dealing with high generalities about things and persons; to these English law had not yet ascended, and (even when allowance has been made for the blunders of mediaeval copyists and the negligence of editors) we are forced to say that his copyings from Azo are not always very intelligent; he fails to take point after point made by the Italian master. Only when he comes to more concrete matters do we see the best that he has learned from abroad. There is no more copying; he has ample raw material of home growth; it is to be found in the rolls of the king's court; but by means of ideas and distinctions which have come, to him from beyond seas he gets principle out of precedent and weaves a rational text. A parallel as good as most historical parallels is ready to hand. Within our own century a great foreign civilian has left his mark on some of the very best of our English text-books, not making them any the less English, only making them more reasonable by having placed their writers at a standpoint outside the English system, a standpoint whence a wood might be seen, not merely a quantity of trees. Azo was the Savigny of the thirteenth century¹.

Bracton's English authorities, It is to be regretted that no one has yet printed a good text of Bracton alongside a good text of Azo. Only when this is done, shall we fully understand the influence of Roman upon English law. But it is much more to be regretted that no one has printed Bracton's English authorities, those five hundred cases which he cited from the rolls. Many of those rolls are vet in existence and surely this matter was worth some pains. Nothing is more remarkable in Bracton's uis law is book than his profuse references to decisions. His law is case law. Now this is remarkable. It is very seldom indeed that any other mediaeval writer, Fleta, Britton, Hengham, Littleton, ever cites a case, and citations in the Year Books are out of the common : seldom is there anything more definite than a vague "It is so in our books." Shall we say that Bracton foresaw what after the lapse of centuries would become the most distinctive characteristic of English law ? It would be folly seriously to attribute to him any such marvellous power of prediction; but the fact remains, his law is case law. In dealing with concrete matters he appeals not to Azo, nor to Ulpian, nor again to Reason or Nature, but to this and that case adjudged by Martin Pateshull or William Raleigh. The rolls of the king's court, therefore, and in particular the rolls of Pateshull and Raleigh should have an interest for us. To say nothing of the light they throw upon every detail of mediaeval life, they contain the authorities, and it well may be, ultimate authorities for many a rule of the common law which hitherto has been traced no further than Bracton's unverified assertion. However to print these rolls in full would be too large, too costly a task for private enterprise. We have been embarrassed by our riches, our untold riches. The nation put its hand to the work and turned back fainthearted. Foreigners print their records; we, it must be supposed, have too many records to be worth printing; so there they lie these invaluable materials for the history of the English people, unread, unknown, almost untouched save by the makers of pedigrees. Now to select important cases from these rolls would be difficult. The endeavour, likely enough would fail, for so much of our old law has been utterly forgotten that perhaps there is no one now competent to say what are the important, the leading cases. A false measure, an unfounded theory might well make the selection unfair and give us the anomalous instead of the normal. What then would we not give, such of us as really care for the history of our law, could we find the selection made for us by some thirteenth-century lawyer, could we find some note book in which such a lawyer had copied the cases which were the most interesting to him and the men of his time, some book in which he jotted down his own remarks on those cases? What would we not give could we indulge the hope that the maker of that book was Bracton?

Such a book chance has preserved.

§ 2. Of Vinogradoff's discovery.

In the summer of 1884 Paul Vinogradoff, Professor of This Note Book found.

This Note Book wanted.

> History in the University of Moscow, was in England seeking materials for mediaeval history. A study of the English manor led him to a study of Bracton's text and he went behind that text to Bracton's authorities. He then heard, I believe from Mr Selby of the Public Record Office, of a MS. at the British Museum known as MS. Additional 12,269. Carefully reading it he came to the conclusion that it was closely connected with Bracton's work and indeed was probably Bracton's own note book. This discovery he published to the world in The Athenaeum for 19 July, 1884; some weeks earlier I had the pleasure of hearing about it from his own lips. His letter to The Athenaeum is printed at the beginning of this book. Hereafter I must repeat its arguments at greater length. But at once I will say that so far as I am aware though the MS. had been used by others, the credit of perceiving its value in the history of law was wholly due to Vinogradoff. At least it should be understood that I claim no credit. I have but worked on the lines indicated by him in the letter which he published.

Valuable even if it be not Bracton's, As I am about to begin an argument, or rather a statement of evidence, which must needs be long and intricate, tending to prove that the MS. in question is what on my title page it is called, namely Bracton's Note Book, I should like to say at once that in my own opinion the value of this book does not depend wholly or even chiefly on the success of my argument. It seemed to me that Bracton's or not Braeton's, the Note Book ought certainly to be printed; this will hardly be denied by any, and if the version of it now published be a fairly accurate and useful version, then I have not failed in what was my main endeavour. If it be Braeton's so much the better. The evidence as to this is all of an indirect kind, consisting of many small details and minute coincidences. Before we can weigh it we ought to know some particulars about Braeton himself, about his selection of authorities, we ought to form some idea as to what would have been in his note book if a note book he had¹.

§ 3. Of Bracton's life².

Of the man himself there is seemingly little to be known. Little known We might indeed collect a large number of small facts about him, for his name occurs very frequently during some twenty years on the Fine, Close and Patent Rolls. But with few exceptions these facts would be all of one not very interesting kind; he is commissioned to take this, that and the other assize of mort d'ancestor or novel disseisin. He can have played no leading part in the exciting history of his time. It was a time of great chroniclers; the greatest of our mediaeval lawyers, the greatest of our mediaeval historians, were contemporaries; Matthew Paris died a few years before Bracton; yet of Bracton Paris has nothing to tell; Paris was writing the history of the present, Braeton was making the history of the future.

¹ It will be necessary to deal in dates and, as the original documents usually refer to the regnal years, it will be well to remember that Henry III. was crowned on 28 Oct. 1216. Thus Easter Term A. R. 3=Easter Term 1219, and a case de Termino S. Michaelis A. R. 10° incipiente 11° is a case from Michaelmas Term A.D. 1226.

² I must acknowledge in a general way my debt to Dugdale, Selden, Madox, Güterbock and Foss, to the prefaces of Sir Travers Twiss, to the article on Bracton by Mr J. M. Rigg in the Dictionary of National Biography, to the Excerpts from the Fine Rolls edited by Mr Roberts, and above all to the MS. calendars of the Patent and Close Rolls in the Public Record Office, on which I have often relied.

His name not Bracton but Henry of Bratton. One thing is clear. His name was not Bracton but Henry of Bratton. It is written a very large number of times upon contemporary Rolls and Feet of Fines and the only variant for Bratton that is at all common is Bretton. Certainly most of the MSS. of his treatise that I have seen give a clear Bracton; but their readings of proper names are extremely corrupt; one has, for instance, to recognize the English villages of Hatfield, Swanscombe and Itteringham under such monstrosities as Heefenur, Snanthanis and Judlibam'. There is no room for doubt that the text writer was the judge whose name appears on roll after roll, or that the judge's name if not Bratton was Bretton. However Bracton he has been for centuries, and so let him be to the end.

A Devonshire man.

He has been claimed by two Devonshire villages, Bratton Fleming near Exmoor, Bratton Clovelly near Dartmoor, also by Bratton Court in the parish of Minehead on the Somersetshire side of Exmoor. There is but little evidence in favour of any of these claims; there is another Bratton in Somersetshire, Bratton Seymour near Wincanton, there are Brattons in Shropshire and Wiltshire, Brettons in Yorkshire and Wales; but there are good reasons for connecting him with Devonshire. In 1212 a William Raleigh was presented by the king to the church of Bratton Fleming²; he may have been the William Raleigh whose judgments Bracton has made immortal and Bracton may have been his pupil. As proof of Bracton's connection with Bratton Court, a tomb in the church of Minehead has been shown as his, but it seems beyond doubt that he was buried in the nave of Exeter Cathedral where long afterwards Bratton's altar stood, Bratton's bell was rung, and Bratton's mass was chanted. We are thus absolved from believing that he had, like the

The best proof of his burial in the Cathedral is given by His place of burial. two interesting deeds relating to the manor of Thorverton. That manor lies near the Exe half-way between Exeter and Tiverton. Henry the Second had given it to the monks of Marmoutier². In 1272 they conveyed it to John Wiger, (probably a member of the family whose name is borne by Broadwood Wiger a village hard by Bratton Clovelly,) subject to a charge of six pounds a year for maintaining two chaplains to celebrate masses in Exeter Cathedral for the soul of Henry of Bratton late chancellor of that church. Five years afterwards Wiger conveyed the manor to the Dean and Chapter, to provide at the altar in the nave of their church before which Henry of Bratton was buried, masses for the souls of the kings of England, of Henry of Bratton and of John Wiger the grantor³. Edward the First seized the manor as an escheat on Wiger's death, but, the conveyances being proved, the Chapter recovered possession of it⁴. The conveyance by the monks of Marmoutier was made in consideration of a sum of 392 marks described as paid to the monks out of the goods of the late chancellor and the goods of John Wiger by the hands of the said John Wiger. From this it would seem His last will. very likely that Wiger was the executor of Bracton's will, and that in pursuance of his will the chantry was endowed⁵.

It is in the west country, more especially in Devonshire, His worldly that we find him active both as judge and as churchman, and the little that we can hear about his workly possessions bears out the supposition that there was his home. That we should hear but little is to his credit. His earnest denunciations of judges who make a profit of their office are not vague generalities⁶; they have point enough when read in the light of contemporary history. Some of his fellows became very rich, scandalously rich if we may trust Matthew Paris; Thomas Multon' for example and Robert Lexington². Henry of Bath, the judge with whom Bracton is most commonly associated, amassed vast wealth by discreditable means; one of his companions, (perhaps it was Bracton,) charged him openly with taking bribes; he could afford to pay a fine of two thousand marks³. Still there are some signs that Bracton had other means of livelihood besides the judicial salary of forty pounds, though such signs are of uncertain value since he may have had a namesake. Thus when in 1254 John of Munedene confesses that he owes eighty-four marks to Henry of Bratton, apparently the price of crops grown on land at Clopton in Suffolk, we cannot be quite sure that the creditor is our Bracton⁴. On the other hand we may well see him in the Henry of Bretton to whom in 1261 Walter Raleigh and Isabella his wife grant for life the manor of Tykenbrede in Cornwall⁵. This manor we may perhaps identify with a spot called Tuckenbury which lies between Linkinhorne and Liskeard⁶. Again we may see him in the Henry of Bratton against whom as tenant of the manor of Saunton in Devon, William of Punchardon and Ermengard his wife bring an action in 1253 for the dower whereof she was endowed by her former husband Thomas of Saunton⁷. The manor of Saunton Court lies in the parish of Braunton, a little south of Morthoe and the wild north coast, a few miles from the village which still bears the name of the family of Ermengard's second husband, the village of Heanton Punchardon. Will the reader remember this lady's not very common name-Ermengard wife of William of Punchardon ? She will be of use to us hereafter.

among them as a judge of assize, heard their causes, associated them with himself as justices. Raleighs and Punchardons, Traceys and Beaupels sat with him on the bench at Exeter, Morchard, Moulton, Torrington, Chulmleigh, Barnstaple, Umberleigh, for assizes were taken at many places¹; no wonder then if some of them were his friends and he had his home among them. Wife or child he can not have had for a reason now to be given.

Like most of the great judges of his age he was an ecclesiastic, though it is only in the last years of his life that, to our knowledge, he had any benefice. In the thirteenth century the chapter of Exeter had among its members more His career than one famous lawyer. At one time the great William siastic. Raleigh was its treasurer², at another Ralph Hengham was its chancellor³. Bracton became archdeacon of Barnstaple on 21st Jan. 1264^4 ; after a few months he resigned the archdeaconry for the chancellorship of the cathedral which was conferred upon him on the 18th May 1264⁵. In the autumn of 1268 that office was given to another and new appointments were made to prebends in the cathedral of Exeter and the collegiate church of Bosham which are described as those of Henry of Bratton⁶. We may conclude from this and some His death. other evidence that he had but lately died. Already in February 1272 the manor of Thorverton was subject to the charge for maintaining masses for his soul.

That he studied law at Oxford, was professor, doctor Did he study at Oxford? utriusque juris and what not, has been repeated many times with much confidence. The sole foundation for the whole story seems to be the bare assertion of Bishop Bale, a flimsy foundation indeed⁷. That there was already a flourishing law school at Oxford is certain⁸, that Bracton may have been of it, is not unlikely but quite unproved; but he may well have got his law, as some of his greatest contemporaries got theirs, namely as a clerk in the king's court or the king's chancery. To suppose that he made his fame by "practising at the bar" would probably be an anachronism.

His judicial career.

For more than twenty years before his death he was a judge and during at least some part of that time he held pleas before the king himself. The evidence of this matter can hardly be weighed unless we know something of the judicial organization of the time. The king, who was now at Westminster now elsewhere, kept by his side a few professional judges who heard the pleas which followed the king. Other professional judges sat during term time on 'the Bench' at Westminster and heard the Placita de Banco. We ought not to think of these two sets of judges as forming two such distinct colleges as existed in later days; a judge who was at one time with the king would at another be on the Bench at Westminster; still the king seems generally to have chosen as his personal attendants judges of experience, and probably it was reckoned promotion when a judge was selected to hear cases, which in theory or fact were litigated coram ipso rege. At irregular intervals, five, six, seven years an eyre for all pleas (ad omnia placita) would be instituted in the counties. For each county two or three of the professional judges would be commissioned along with some prelate or baron and knights of the shire. Besides these general commissions, there were special commissions for the possessory assizes; generally one of the professional judges was empowered to hear this, that and the other assize of mort d'ancestor or novel disseisin, and was trusted to choose his own associates; a very large number of these special commissions was issued every year. The easy work of delivering the gaols was done annually with more or less regularity, but the professional judges were seldom troubled with this.

Nature of the evidence.

Now as to the names of the judges who go on an eyre, or who are sent to take assizes, there is no lack of information; they occur on the Patent, Close and Fine Rolls. Also there is little difficulty in discovering who sat on the Bench at Westminster in any given term. 'Feet of fines' exist by the thousand, and the judges before whom the concord was made are always named in them. But as to the judges who were with the king, the task is harder. Whether as yet they were appointed by any enrolled document seems very doubtful; the Plea Rolls seldom name them; and it is very rare to find the record of a fine levied coram ipso rege. This last fact will not surprise us, for in after days the Court of Common Pleas (and this 'the Bench' was coming to be) was the proper place for real actions and consequently for fines. Still such records do exist, just in sufficient number to prove, were other proof wanting, that while certain judges were at the Bench certain others were holding pleas before the king himself¹.

Now the first known fact in Bracton's indicial career is Employment that in 1245 he visited the counties of Lincoln, Nottingham in eyre. and Derby as a justice in eyre along with Roger Thurkelby, Gilbert Preston and others; he was at Lincoln on the morrow of the Ascension, at Nottingham on the 30th of June². Seemingly he was never sent on any other evre of the common kind; but late in 1259 he was sent by the baronial council then in power on an eyre of a very special character for the redress of grievances³. In 1248 however there begins a long series of entries on the Patent Rolls which shows that from that time until his death he was constantly commissioned to take assizes in the south-western counties, Cornwall, Devon, As justice Somerset, sometimes Dorset and Wiltshire; rarely was he sent elsewhere⁴. This series goes on with hardly any break until the end of 1267; the last entry that I have found is dated the 26th of December in that year⁵; we have seen other reason for believing that he died in 1268. Hence we might infer with certainty that he was one of the regular . permanent judges. But further there is an entry on the Close Roll under date 7th Aug. 1259', which declares that henceforth special justiciaries (speciales justiciarie) are only to be committed to the following persons, namely, Roger of Thurkelby, Henry of Bath, Henry of Bretton, Giles of Erdington, Gilbert of Preston, William of Wilton, John of Wyville. This seems to mean that a commission to take this particular assize or to hear that particular action is only to be granted to one of the judges here named. It looks like an attempt of the baronial council to limit the king's power of appointing any one whom he pleases, to act as justice for this occasion only, an attempt prophetic of future statutes². Now with the exception of Bracton all these judges at one time or another sat on the Bench at Westminster and fines were there levied before them. But Bracton seems never to have sat on the Bench. I have examined several hundred feet of fines and thus constructed the table of justices who sat on the Bench, which will be found at the end of this Introduction; my results agree fairly well with those obtained by Dugdale, and Notasjustice so it appears certain that Bracton never held the placita de banco⁸.

He holds the pleas which follow the king.

That at times he held the placita coram ipso rege there is evidence, sparse indeed, but yet sufficient. In a cartulary of Waltham Abbey is found a copy of the chirograph of a fine levied as early as the autumn of 1248 coram ipso rege; the justices named in it are Henry of Bath, Jeremiah of Caxton

² The justices of assize actually commissioned in the next year are all the above and Peter Percy, John Cave and Nicholas de la Tour. The number during the previous years had been considerably larger, fifteen or yet more, including some, e.g. Robert Walerand, who may have been re-garded as royal partizans. After this the number again increases slightly, and Walerand among others was again commissioned. (MS. Index to Patent Rolls.)

³ I looked at the fines for Bedford,

Berks, Bucks, Devon, Derby, York and 'Divers Counties' until I obtained several concurrent authorities for the judges of each term. An examination of the fines for other counties might lead to some modifi-fication of the list, but the search seemed quite sufficient to show that Bracton never was one of the regular occupants of the Bench. In Rot. Hund, vol. 1, p. 14, jurors speak of a case as decided by Henry of Bath and Henry of Bretton justices of the bench; but this is but a verdict and refers to a past time.

and Henry of Bratton¹. The foot of another fine levied between 1246 and 1256 gives us as the judges who are with the king, Henry of Bath and Henry of Braston². In another from the summer of 1257 Henry of Bath, Henry of Bretton. and Nicholas de la Tour (de Turri) are the judges³. Just at this date we find Bracton in receipt of £40 a year from the Exchequer, the usual judicial salary⁴. A Plea Roll of 1253 speaks of a past time when Jerenniah of Caxton and Henry of Bretton held the pleas coram rege⁵. In 1255 a case is to be heard by Henry of Bath, Henry of Bratton, Henry de la Mare and Nicholas de la Tour and others of the king's council in the king's court⁶. In 1254 the king provided Bracton with a house in London⁷, in 1253 and again in 1256 with royal venison⁸. Lastly Matthew Paris has preserved the record of a suit between the Abbot of St Albans and the Bishop of Durham. It followed the king; the writs commanded appearance coram nobis ubicunque fuerimus. In November 1256 it came before Henry of Bretton and Nicholas de la Tour at Winchester; a judicial writ was issued and tested at Clarendon by Henry of Bretton; the next year it came before the same two judges at Westminster and the judicial writ was again tested by Henry of Bretton⁹. At this moment Bracton seems to have been the premier of those judges whom the king had with him. From all this it may be inferred that from 1249 to 1259 or thereabouts, he was a judge constantly employed in hearing pleas before the king. That he should not either have been sent on eyre or have held the placita de banco is rather curious; but the same is true of Jeremiah Caxton with whom he is more than once associated, and of the more famous or notorious Robert Walerand; Nicholas de la Tour again does not appear on the Bench until many years after he has been holding pleas before the king, and Henry de la Mare and William of Wilton, both distinguished judges, appear there but very casually. The natural inference is that the king found Bracton a useful man to have about him.

For the years after 1259 there is less evidence. Bracton steadily took assizes in the south west, but that he was with the king I have seen no proof. However when the time of storm and strife is over he again appears in high place. In the spring of 1267 he was appointed member of a commission of prelates, judges, barons and knights to hear the claims of 'the disinherited,' of those, that is, who had forfeited their lands by siding with de Montfort'. He and another royal judge, Richard of Middleton, are named between a bishop and an abbot and before all others, and he is named before Middleton. It seems likely then that all along and until his death he held pleas before the king and some have conjectured that he may be called chief justice. A thorough search among existing records would probably reveal a few more facts².

It must not be dissembled, however, that as to his death a certain difficulty is created by an entry on the Fine Roll, which seems to have escaped the notice of his biographers, though it has long been in print. The roll for A. R. 49 (A.D. 1264—5) has several writs which direct that the interest, fees and penalties due to the Jews in respect of the debts owed by certain favoured persons shall be forgiven. One such writ, dated 8th March, 1265, is made in favour of Adam le Despenser. Then comes the following entry:—

² It has been thought that he may have borne the title of chief justice during the interval between the death of the Barons' Justiciar Hugh le Despenser at the battle of Evesham, 4 Aug. 1265, and the appointment, 8 March, 1268 (Rot. Pat. 52 H. 3, m. 23), of Robert Bruce as chief justice to hold pleas before the king himself. This last date must be very near that of Bracton's death. But the elaims of Robert Walerand deserve consideration, for it seems that he pronounced the sentence of Winchester, Sept. 1265; such at least seems the meaning of the following lines from an ancient poem (Chroniele of Rishanger, Camd. Soc. p. 145):-

- Exhaeredati proceres sunt rege jubente
- Et male tractati, Waleran R. dicta ferente.

His last years.

Statement that he was killed at Lewes untrue.

'Consimilem literam habet Johanna soror et heres Henrici de 'Brattona qui interfectus fuit in conflictu habito apud Lewes'.' Less than a year after the battle this entry was made. However it is absolutely certain that Henry of Bratton the judge was not slain at Lewes; many entries on this very roll and other later rolls set this beyond doubt and debar us from the interesting question under which banner he was fighting on the fatal day. We must suppose either that he had a namesake, or that the clerk who wrote the Fine Roll made a blunder. The latter alternative seems the more acceptable. Of a second Henry of Bratton no trace has been found, and the writ in question would hardly have been made in favour of a nobody. Two of the king's justices were killed at Lewes, William of Wilton fell by the sword, Fulk Fitz Warin was drowned². It may be that the name of one of them should have appeared in this writ instead of that of their illustrious colleague.

But the mention of Lewes must remind us that the ten Great events of his time. last years of Bracton's life were great years in English history, years of discontent and strife, of dissolution and reformation, of constitutional growth and civil war. The Mad Parliament, the Provisions of Oxford, the Provisions of Westminster, the paper constitutions, the fruitless negotiations and projects and compromises, the Mise of Amiens, the battle of Lewes, the Parliament of 1265, the battle of Evesham, the sentence of disherison, the dictum of Kenilworth-these are still famous. The question then is natural, what part did Bracton play in them? On the answer to this may depend our opinion as to the authenticity of the most celebrated of the words attributed to his pen.

The answer must be that he played no prominent, no He played no prominent picturesque, part, did nothing that any chronicler would note. Part in politics. A little more may be said. He became a judge at a time when Henry was already provoking the storm, when parliaments were already clamorous for reform, when year by year the complaint went up that despite oaths and confirmations the charters were not kept, that writs were issued contrary to the law of the land. Such complaints, if they were complaints against the king, were complaints against his judges also. A royal judge of the time may have felt with the discontented barons, the discontented nation; Roger Thurkelby could confide to Matthew Paris his dislike of the non obstante clause, his dread of the Poitevin favourites'; but an open attachment to what we are wont to think the patriotic and constitutional party would hardly have been possible. Bracton however grew in favour with the king, held the specially royal pleas before the king himself. Still when the storm burst he did not lose his place. On the contrary the entry on the Close Roll dated 7th Aug. 1259, of which we have already spoken, shows that he was trusted by the then dominant barons. He is one of seven judges who may be commissioned to take assizes. Again in the same year, directly after the publication of the Provisions of Westminster, the ruling barons sent out commissioners to inquire into and redress the popular grievances, especially the misdoings of the sheriffs and royal bailiffs. The work was to be done by the judges associated with trusted members of the baronial party. Bracton was commissioned for Gloucester, Worcester and Hereford along with Humfrey of Bohun Earl of Hereford. This seems clear proof that he was not regarded as a royal partizan².

During all that follows Bracton is still commissioned to take the Devonshire assizes; men may come and go, constitutions may be established and annulled, king or earl may be victorious, but Bracton takes the Devonshire assizes.

¹ Mat. Par. vol. 5, pp. 211, 317. ² Rot. Cl. 44 H. 3, m. 18 d. 28th Nov. This commission is enrolled very near the cclebrated Provisions. It is for an eyre of a very special character and gives valuable information as to the causes of the great crisis. Rishanger (Rolls Series, p. 5) reports that in 1260 the justices in cyre were repulsed from Hereford, because, according to the great men of the county, the eyre was contrary to the Provisions of Oxford. This should be read in connection with the statement of the Worcester annalist (Ann. Monast. vol. 4, p. 446) that the justices who came to Wor-cester on 1 July, 1261, were repulsed, because seven years had not elapsed since the last eyre. These statc-ments do not refer to Bracton's journey with the Earl of Hereford; but they are important illustrations of the national grievances. The king oppresses the nation; the judges are the instruments of oppression.

He was trusted by all parties.

He is commissioned before and after the day of Lewes, before and after the day of Evesham. What we say of him might be said of at least some other of the judges. William of Wilton, who was layman and knight, fought and died for the king; but on the whole the judges seem to be gaining that position outside party polities which we in this day think should naturally be theirs. Almost the last that we read of Bracton is that he is appointed to hear the complaints of the Disinherited¹. It would seem then that he must have been a moderate, fair-minded man, whom all could trust and regard as a great lawyer and a righteous judge, that they could say of him as he wished, Justus es, domine, et rectum judicium tuum².

One small fact of considerable value was revealed by the diligence of Madox³. In 1258 the barons of the Exchequer were ordered to procure that the various plea rolls of Henry's reign which were in the hands of divers persons should be restored to the Treasury, the proper place for them; an Theorder order was made that Henry of Bratton should bring in the of the rolls. rolls of Martin of Pateshull and William of Raleigh; a similar order was made for the restoration of the rolls of Stephen of Segrave which were in the hands of the Abbot of Leicester and the Prior of Kenilworth⁴. The order may have been a very proper order; it was only right that the records of the king's court should be deposited in the custody of public officers; and yet we may be the losers, for who shall say how much more perfect Bracton's book might not have been, had he not been deprived of the rolls whence he drew his law? At all events here is a fact to be remembered in the course of our investigation.

§ 4. Of Bracton's Text.

The editions of the treatise.

The manuscripts.

We must now turn from the man to his text. But where are we to find that text? In 1569 an edition was published by Richard Tottell. A reprint of this was published in 1640, and what in substance was hardly better than another reprint was lately published under the authority of the Master of the Rolls. The text of 1569 was in its day a not discreditable product. The most serious fault to be laid to the charge of its anonymous author 'T. N.' is that to all seeming (though in his preface he shows himself aware that the manuscripts teem with interpolations) he wished to give as ample a text as possible and chose for his guide the manuscripts which would give the most. About forty variants, many of them trivial, were all that he found worthy of note; though he says that twelve manuscripts were examined. But though not discreditable in its day, the text of 1569 should satisfy no one in this more critical age, when the collation of MSS. has become a comparatively easy task. I have myself seen in London, Oxford and Cambridge near thirty MSS.; there may well be fifty in existence, some from the thirteenth, most from the fourteenth century. The differences between them are very numerous and very important, and the making of a good edition will some day demand several years of hard labour. Not that the true reading of any given sentence is often seriously doubtful; Bracton's language is simple and straightforward. Allowance being made for misprints and for the obvious blunders of copyists, many of which an intelligent reader can rectify by conjecture, the text of 1569 will generally give each sentence pretty correctly; the proper names have suffered worst and this makes the verification of Bracton's citations a somewhat difficult task ; also the passages of Roman Law unfamiliar to the transcribers have suffered very badly. But when the question is what sentences should be in the book and in what order they should come, then there is often grave cause for doubt; the manuscripts disagree, and the printed text is a thoroughly bad guide. Not unfrequently one will find in a MS. a passage which certainly does not come from Bracton. Two plain instances Interpolamay be seen in Tottell's text; reference is made to a case the Mss. before John of Metingham, a judge of Edward the First's day, a case which has been recently printed in one of Mr Horwood's Year Books¹; also we read how the period of limitation for an assize of mort d'ancestor was changed in king Edward's day by the Statute (1275) of Westminster the First². But in some manuscripts one will find worse things than these: sometimes a large selection from the Edwardian statutes is incorporated³, or again occasion is taken of Bracton's mention of the tree of consanguinity to foist in a whole treatise of this or that learned canonist on the subject of consanguinity and affinity⁴; in one case may be found embedded in the middle of Bracton's text what openly proclaims itself to be the work of the Spanish priest Johannes de Deo⁵.

Against such obvious interpolations it is possible to guard oneself; but there are subtler sources of error. A reader of the printed book, who reads with the persuasion that his author was a sensible, orderly-minded man, will note many passages which seem to be dislocated and some at least of Addiciones. these he will suspect of being marginal notes which in the process of transcription have forced their way into the text. Occasionally what has all the appearance of being a note of this kind has lodged itself in the very middle of a sentence⁶. A glance, however superficial, at the MSS. will strengthen the suspicion. It is rare I believe to find a MS. which has in its margin notes, which are as old or nearly as old as ¹ Br. f. 26. This seems clearly the case from 1294 in Y. B. 21 and 22 Edw. I. p. 449. I have not yet seen this case in any MS.

² Br. f. 253 b. Most of the MSS. give the new rule and seem to have as their common original some MS. into which that rule was interpolated; MB, MM, OA, OB, however give the old law fixing the return of John from Ireland as the period of limitation. 3 ME.

4 ME. OB.

⁵ ME. I have given some account of this in the Law Quarterly Review, vol. 2, p. 278.

Bracton's day; marginal notes which are clearly of a later time are not very uncommon and a few of these have become part of the printed text¹; but in most of our MSS. the older notes or glosses have already got themselves out of the margin. Often enough however their true nature is revealed by the fact that they are to be found only in some of the MSS., while in others they appear now at this point now at that of the text; having once left their proper home they have wandered about in search of a convenient resting place. Then again there are MSS. in the margin of which one occasionally finds the word Ad-di-cio so written as to stamp as an addition the passage over against which it is set. This points to some older MS., the head of the family, which had these passages not in its text but in its margin. In one MS. there are at least nineteen passages thus marked. In more than one there are traces of these Addiciones having been numbered, thus Addicio Prima, Addicio Tercia, Addicio Undecima. In another MS. the word Plus has been used for the same purpose, and it may be suspected that the word Nota, which is very often found, has sometimes though not always a similar meaning².

The Digby MS. There is, again, one MS. in the Bodleian Library³ which is of exceptional importance. Here a large part of what we have been wont to regard as Bracton's text stands in the margin. Two scribes at least were employed on the work; the parts written by one of them are rich with marginalia in his handwriting; the other either left marginalia uncopied or else incorporated them in the text. Now the matter which is still in the margin comprises many, if not all, of the passages which in corresponding parts of other MSS. are stamped as Addiciones and many other passages as well; in all they make a large mass, perhaps a thirtieth part of the printed book. The great majority of them are found as part of the text in the printed version of the treatise. They consist mainly of explanations, illustrations, qualifications, of the text; but sometimes new topics are introduced and discussed at length. A decided opinion would be premature, but they look as if they might well have come from Bracton himself. The MS. has the semblance rather of a book which is still in the making, than of a book which was written by one man and afterwards glossed by another. Among the marginalia are citations of cases from very early years of Henry's reign, and I have not noticed any citations which might not have been made by Bracton. These marginal matters are not the rough notes of a practising lawyer made merely for his own behoof; some are elaborate and learned disquisitions. The passage for instance in which the Bracton of the printed Vulgate makes his greatest parade of Roman law with numerous citations from Code and Digest, stands in the margin¹. But of course it were dangerous to dogmatize until a real effort has been made to settle the text by a detailed comparison of all existing MSS.

² MH and OC are good specimens of MSS, which show Addiciones; but one or more may be seen also in MB, MC, MD, MI, MM and CB, while MA has several passages marked as Plus, Plus usque huc and the like. ³ Digby, 222, mv OA.

The best example of the problems which lie in wait for variances an editor of Bracton is afforded by what is perhaps the most the MSS. remarkable passage in the whole book. Seldom have more momentous words been written in a lawyer's text, for this is the famous passage about the king so often quoted in the political trials of the seventeenth century, quoted by the President of a High Court of Justice when an English king was to be sent to the scaffold², repeated over and over again by legal theorists and historians as giving the opinion of the great mediaeval judge. A brief digression about this matter will serve the purpose of showing how little trust should be put in the text of the printed book. Other illustrations might easily be chosen, but this should be of interest to others besides lawyers and antiquaries³.

Bracton⁴ in his orderly manner has come to speak of charters, charters of feoffment and so forth. He distinguishes royal from other charters. Concerning royal charters and the deeds of kings, he says, neither the justices nor private persons can nor ought to dispute, nor can they interpret them should any doubt arise. If the words are dubious, obscure or ambiguous, the king's interpretation and the king's pleasure must be awaited, for whose it is to grant, his it is to interpret; even if the charter be altogether false because of an erasure or a forged seal, still it is better to proceed to judgment before the king himself. Thus far the undoubted Bracton. Then comes the following:—

Item nec factum Regis nec cartam potest quis iudicare, ita quod factum domini Regis irritetur¹. Sed dicere poterit quis quod Rex iusticiam fecerit, et bene, et si hoc, eadem ratione quod male, et ita imponere ei quod iniuriam emendet, ne incidat Rex et iusticiarii in iudicium viventis Dei propter iniuriam. Rex autem habet superiorem Deum scilicet. Item legem per quam factus est Rex. Item curiam suam videlicet comites, barones, quia comites dicuntur quasi socii Regis, et qui habet socium, habet magistrum, et ideo si Rex fuerit sine fraeno, i.e. sine lege, debent ei fraenum ponere.

If, (the book continues,) the king is left unbridled by his barons, his subjects will cry to Our Lord Jesus Christ to bridle him; to whom the Lord will answer, 'Behold I will 'call upon them from afar a mighty nation and an unknown, 'whose tongue they shall not understand, which shall tear up 'their roots from the earth, and by such shall they be judged 'for they would not judge their subjects justly'; and in the end bound hand and foot He will send them into the fiery furnace and outer darkness, there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

The reader will feel a strange shock as he passes from these glowing words to the icy calmness of the next sentence, 'If a private person make a gift of a certain is obscure, and I have not found an acceptable variant. It seems to mean this—It is allowable to say that the king has done justice and right; this being so, it must be allowable also to say, when such is the truth, that he has done ill, and thus to impose on him the duty of making amends.

Jeremiah, v. 15.

The passage about the king and his masters.

'thing for a future consideration it behaves that the things which are to be given in return be certain. This Contradicted by other abrupt change of key might not arouse suspicion. But the passages, doctrine here delivered is flatly contrary to several other passages in the book. The writer has already had and taken a good occasion for explaining the nature of the kingship, when near the outset he made a classification of persons. All are below the king and he is below none save He has no peer in his realm, much less a superior. God. He ought to be below no man, but only below God and the law. He ought indeed, like Christ whose vicar he is, to obey the law; but if he do wrong and will not make amends, it is his sufficient punishment that he must await God's vengeance. No one may presume to dispute his deeds, much less to go against his deeds (f. 5 b). Such is the theory which Bracton has put in the proper place for a theory of royalty. It does not stand alone. Elsewhere he says incidentally, Rex parem non habet, nec vicinum, nec superiorem (f. 52), Parem autem habere non debet nec multo fortius superiorem (f. 107)...erit iniuria ipsius Domini Regis, nec poterit ei necessitatem aliquis imponere quod illam corrigat et emendet nisi velit, cum superiorem non habeat nisi Deum, et satis erit illi pro poena quod Deum expectet ultorem (f. 368 b), Pares non habet, neque superiores (f. 412).

The contradiction is glaring and it is a contradiction over the most burning question of contemporary politics. May the earls and barons force the king to do right and abstain from wrong? There is yet however one passage to be noticed; its authenticity seems unquestionable¹. The king ought, when petitioned, to make atonement for his misdeeds, quod si non fecerit, sufficiat ei pro poena quod Dominum expectet ultorem, qui dicit, 'Mihi vindictam et Ego retribuam', nisi sit qui dicat quod universitas regni et baronagium suum hoc facere debeat et possit in curia ipsius Regis (f. 171 b). Now under this nisi sit qui dicat, Bracton may well be stating his own opinion. Most undoubtedly he held that the king was bound by law, that God would exact of him a very strict account. The king who does well is God's vicar; the king who does ill is the devil's vicar (f. 107 b). He is very much in earnest about this; doubtless he thought that the king was doing ill; many sentences in his book can have been no pleasant reading for Henry. But between this hint that the baronage and the incorporate realm may perhaps restrain an erring king and the dogmatic statement that the king is below his court, that the barons are his equals and his masters, that if they do not restrain him they will be damned, there is a vast gulf.

The discrepancies between these various passages were brought to light in the great trials of the seventeenth century. Every one cited, every one could legitimately cite Bracton. But long before they had been apparent to at least one reader. In the Cambridge library there is a sumptuous manuscript comprising Bracton's treatise and divers other books of law. Bracton's text has been elaborately glossed by one whom there is some reason for calling John of Longueville, a justice of the time of Edward II. Against the passage in which his author expressly treats of the kingship and says that the king has no peers (f. 5 b), he sets down an argument drawn from the more questionable passage (f. 34), and proves with syllogistic parade that the king has equals, superiors, masters¹. But indeed the contradiction lies on the surface. Conceivably the same man at different times wrote all these sentences; but he can not have intended that all of them should appear as parts of one book; one of them looks very much as if it had been written with the very object of explicitly contradicting the others. Nor even were there no manuscripts extant, could there be much doubt as to which passage should be regarded as the afterthought or interpolation. The statement that the king has fellows and masters is contradicted by at least five statements found in all parts of the book.

 1 MS. Dd. vii. 6, folio 4 dors. according to a pencil pagination of the Bracton. This is the MS. used by Mr Nichols in his edition of Britton and described by him, vol. 1, p. lx. fol.

The contradiction soon perceived.

Now in the Digby MS. this passage is not to be found. The witness of the MSS. Unfortunately however it is in a part of the treatise which was copied by that one of the two scribes who did not copy marginalia. In six other MSS. I have found no trace of it¹. In an eighth it is not to be found but Addicio de Cartis appears in the margin². In another good Oxford MS. it is comprised in an Addi-cio³. Lastly the MSS, which give it differ among themselves as to where it shall come; very often it is made to precede the paragraph which in the printed book it follows⁴.

The conclusion then to which we are led is that this These famous famous passage is no part of the original text. Certainly it words not part of the is of ancient date; it is found in the Fleta⁵, a book which is original text. believed to have been written in 1290 or very shortly afterwards⁶. Its vehemence sayours strongly of the time of revolution which ended with the battle of Evesham. Bracton may have written it in the margin of his manuscript, having learned and unlearned many things since he wrote the body of the treatise. On the other hand it seems unlikely that one who steadily acted as judge after the death of de Montfort, who was selected to hear the claims of the Disinherited. had written what must have been an earnest, almost violent, defence of the barons' cause. Of course however this interesting question cannot be solved by a priori speculations⁷.

Case 1108. A strong statement of the principle that the king cannot be sued is enrolled as part of the judgment of the court; Dominus Rex non potest summoneri nec preceptum sumere ab aliquo cum non habeat superiorem se in regno suo. This is very contrary to the old fable, as Bacon called it (Works, ed. Spedding, vol. 7, p. 694), about Praecipe Henrico Regi, in which perhaps some still believe. § 5. Of the Date of Bracton's Treatise.

Conclusions as to date must be provisional.

Now I have made no effort to settle Bracton's text; this could not be done as a bye work; some day it will, we may hope, be the serious task of a competent scholar. It seemed to me that I should best be furthering that task by publishing this Note Book. So though I have occasionally examined such MSS. of the treatise as lay readiest to hand, I have not gone very far behind the printed text. Enough has been said however to show that the printed text is very untrustworthy, that it contains many things which were better in the margin or in an appendix; and, this being so, the problem of assigning a date to the treatise, is obviously difficult. In particular we may be induced to fix too late a date by some few passages which will turn out to be no part of the original work. Still if this danger be had in mind a few cautious conclusions may be attained which will be valuable in the course of our argument. The first conclusion, as I think, is this that the book is unfinished, and therefore, in a certain sense, has no precise date.

The treatise unfinished,

That it is an unfinished book seems most likely. The last part of it consists of an elaborate treatise on the writ of right. We naturally expect that this will end with some account of the trial, the duel and the grand assize. About this much might have been written which would have been of great use to practitioners; it is the consummation of the whole procedure; all that has gone before touching the forms of writ and count, the summonses, defaults, essoins, warranties, exceptions, should be preliminary. But we are disappointed; instead of that for which we look we get three brief chapters about the mesne and final process in personal actions; and so ends the book. This unsatisfactory ending is enough to rouse suspicion and the suspicion is confirmed if we remember that, when dealing with the trial by battle of criminal cases, Bracton told us that the reason for a certain rule would be given below when the wager of battle in a eivil action was described¹. This is a distinct case of a promise never fulfilled; the wager of battle in a civil action is never described.

Other cases there are of unfulfilled promises, though $\frac{Vnfulfilled}{promises}$ these are less distinct. Thus there is a promise to treat of the action for recovering a villein (placitum de nativis)², of the action of debt³, of the action of trespass⁴, and of fines⁵. Now though the writer does touch these topics incidentally, still such casual treatment is not what he has led us to expect. What is more, if we look at the contemporary plea rolls, or at the cases in this Note Book, we shall see that an exposition of these matters is just what is required in order to make the treatise a very complete account of the law administered in the king's court. Bracton had Glanvill's work before him and Glanvill had devoted a book to the denativo habendo, another to the placitum de debito, another to the finalis concordia. Fines were matters of daily importance; the action of debt was becoming common in Bracton's time and by the end of that time the action of trespass was by no means rare. The constant mention that he makes of villein status as a matter which may come into debate in the course of various actions sets us on hoping, but hoping in vain, that he will tell us about the one action in which the question of status can be directly raised and decided. The promises he gives us are promises which we have a right to expect and they are unfulfilled.

Unfulfilled, that is, in the printed book. The supposition that we have lost something should not be altogether excluded; and a diligent examination of all the MSS. might possibly bring to light some as yet unprinted chapters. But unfortunately there is much to make us think that we have already the whole of what was written. The fact that Fleta and Britton break off where Bracton breaks off is an almost conclusive proof that the trial of the writ of right was never described; if Bracton's description of it has been lost, it was lost within a few years after his death.

Self-contradictions.

That he at one time intended to perfect his account of the great ultimate remedy for the recovery of land seems to me certain, and I think it probable, though less certain, that his scheme comprehended some treatment of final concords, of actions of debt and of trespass and the action for reducing a fugitive serf into villeinage. Were this not so it would be rash to regard as evidence of incompleteness the occasional occurrence of self-contradictions; even in these days of print it is not unknown that a very good writer may contradict himself. When however we scan Bracton's work with the belief that it is unfinished, this belief will find fresh sustenance in many quarters. Passages which we should otherwise reject as interpolated by a later hand may be admitted as the author's afterthoughts though they do not harmonize with their context. In a few instances we find contradictions so glaring that we cannot ascribe them to confused thought or insufficient analysis. One striking example may be enough :- the question is three times raised, (surely a very notable question when regard is had to the "common law" of later days,) whether land can be made devisable per formam doni, that is to say, if there be a feoffment to A and "his heirs, assigns or devisees" (tibi et heredibus tuis, vel cui dare vel assignare in vita, vel in morte legare volueris) can A devise the land ?-twice is this question answered in the affirmative, the devisee can recover from the heir; once the form of writ applicable for the purpose is given¹; once it is said that such a writ, though as yet unheard of, may well be made²; but in a third passage it is denied after argument that the devise will be valid³. Now were we sure that Bracton finished his book we should be strongly tempted to reject one or two of these three passages; but as it is, they may all well be his, representing the fluctuations of his own opinion or the fluctuations of judicial practice. So again, to refer once more to the ever famous words', it is conceivable that Bracton wrote that the king has as superior to him his court, to wit his earls and barons, though the same Bracton repeatedly and emphatically denied that the king has any superior save God and the law, or even any equal²; just in his day such theories as these were being rapidly moulded and remoulded by the course of events.

On the other hand the opinion that we have here a mere The book an organic book, collection of various tracts written at different times and not a collec-tion of tracts. loosely strung together seems unfounded. It is an organic book, it has a definite intelligible plan, the parts are closely interdependent, references are made and in general correctly made to what has gone before and what is coming afterwards; some parts are more highly finished than others, but the whole hangs together very tightly and resists any attempt to cut it up into independent sections.

Finding a book left unfinished by one who died in 1268 Most of the cases he cites it were a natural first guess that he was actively engaged are earlier than 1240. upon it when death stayed his hand. Now it well may be that to the very end of his life he still from time to time added here a gloss and there a note to a manuscript which was yet in his possession; but the text as a whole must have an earlier date, indeed the next piece of evidence that we have to consider would incline us to give it a much earlier date. This consists of the cases which are cited from the rolls. His manner of citing will be described more fully below; here it is enough to say that as a general rule he gives the date of the case, or else information which enables us easily to fix the date. A glance at the table printed at the end of this Introduction will show that at least nine-tenths of his cases come from the years between 1216 and 1240.

With A.R. 24 (A.D. 1239—40) the continuous stream of very few eitations ceases. I believe that only nine cases are vouched as being of later date than this, one from an evre of A.R. 29

or 30¹, two (one of which is twice cited) from A.R. 31², one from A.R. 32^3 , one from A.R. $32-33^4$, one from A.R. 33^5 , one from A.R. 386, one probably from A.R. 42 (the printed text gives A.R. 13) lastly one from A.R. 46. Only nine cases from twenty-two years; one would like very much to say that these have been interpolated, for it must seem to us very strange that a text writer should prefer old cases to new. But saving only the first and the last two, I have not found in the MSS. any warrant for treating these citations otherwise than as part of the original text. The case from A.R. 38 is given without any mark that arouses suspicion, though A.R. 37 is the date to which it is most commonly assigned. The citation from A.R. 42 may have been interpolated⁷, and there is good evidence that the citation from A.R. 46 was interpolated⁸; but I have seen nothing to show that the interpolator was not Bracton himself, and so far as MS, authority goes, these citations stand on the same footing as much that passes as Bracton's work. There are, again, cases which are cited without any date being mentioned. Their number is not very large, about forty if some vague references be included. Some of these I have been able to trace to the period from which Bracton has drawn most of his lore, the first four and twenty years of the reign. Others seem to belong to a considerably later time; one of them was tracked

¹ Br. f. 413. Some MSS. give A.R. 30, and ascribe it to an eyre of William Raleigh; this must be wrong; many other MSS. cite from the eyre of Thurkelby in A.R. 29; Bracton was with him on this eyre. A few, in particular OA, have not the citation. It may be an interpolation.

² Br. f. 414, Abbot of Glastonbury and Bishop of Bath, some MSS, give A.R. 30 some 31; Br. 114, 414 b, Peter of Saroy and Abbot of Rieraulx, some MSS, give A.R. 30, some 31.

There is a case on the roll for Mich. A.R. 37–38 (Coram Rege Roll, No. 93, m. 10 d) which looks like the case in question.

by Vinogradoff to A.R. 1254¹; this and a good many others of its fellows seem not to have formed part of the text as originally written². Inferences founded on these imperfect citations would be hazardous. Of all passages open to the suspicion of having been marginal notes these are the most open. A note of a case which mentions no date might be very useful to the person making it; it would in general be very useless to others. Bracton writing for the world gives chapter and verse with laborious precision; Bracton, or any one else, scribbling in the margin for his own use would have no occasion to be so particular. On the whole then though the copious stream of citations ceases with A.R. 24 (A.D. 1239 -40) I have not found authority for rejecting the few scattered cases which come from a time as late as A.R. 37 or 38 (A.D. 1252-4) or even for supposing that yet later cases were not cited by Bracton himself. An ordinance made on the occasion of the dedication of the Abbey of Hayles, which took place on 5th Nov. 1251 is mentioned and I have seen no reason for consigning it to the margin.

That some of the interpolations come from Bracton Some of the himself seems very probable. The printed text gives a tions due to Bracton subtle exposition of the doctrine of possession as applied to a ^{binuself}. case in which a donee obtains physical control of part of the thing given, while the donor remains in possession of the other part. There are several good MSS. in which this is not found³. In the middle of it we read, 'Male actum fuit in 'contrarium inter Rogerum de Reyne et Robertum de Shute 'de terra de Vulverton.' Now this case (it concerned the hundred of Dulverton) may be seen on the precious roll of assizes taken by Bracton in the year 1254¹. He held that a would-be donee had not obtained possession either of the land or of the hundred court which pertained to the land. The case was taken to the court above by the process of certificatio; as to the land Bracton's decision was affirmed, but as to the hundred it was reversed; this appears from a little strip of parchment annexed to the roll which well may be in Bracton's handwriting. "Male actum est in contrarium," then, is most likely the complaint of a judge over-ruled but not convinced. On the same roll there is a case between William Montacute and Andrew Wake²; in the margin of the Digby MS. of the treatise I have seen without any context the words Wake Munt Aqu. That Bracton annotated his own work as late as 1254 seems plain, and unless some MS. will enable us to remove into the margin a yet larger mass of matter than that on which the Digby MS. casts suspicion, we shall have to hold that he was at work on his original text up to that date or a few years earlier.

This may surprise us when we remember that the vast majority of the cases on which he relied were already twenty years old. Now in this context we should note a passage which stands at the outset of his book. Stating the scope and purpose of his work, he tells us that he had given his mind to ancient judgments of the just³. The judges of to-day, this seems his opinion, are perverting the law, they are too often ignorant and partial; we must go back to the wisdom of the men of old time. Now if due weight be given to this declaration it seems to follow that the judges whom Bracton revered, Pateshull and Raleigh, already belonged to a past age; their decisions were vetera judicia. Another passage may serve to show that by this phrase he did not necessarily refer to a very remote period; he tells us how on a certain point there was a difference of opinion among the ancients (contentio inter veteres) and solves the question by decisions cited from the fourth and sixteenth years of Henry the Third¹. Still it was to old judgments that he went for his law. This may seem strange to us brought up in the belief that the latest decision of a court is of more value than any previous determination. But we have Bracton's word for it; he deliberately chose old judgments, judgments of judges no longer on the bench, as the best authorities.

Bracton at work as late as 1254.

His preference for

Thus much as to the earlier of the two limits within Work subwhich the book must be placed. As to the later; Bracton finished before 1259, did not die until 1268; but he cannot have written the main part of his book or have revised it during the few last years of his life. In the first place he repeatedly uses a phrase (donec terrae fuerint communes) which seems to imply that England and Normandy ought to be and (please God) will some day be, under the same ruler². This phrase must have lost its meaning when in 1259 Henry resigned his claim to Normandy. Again it seems fairly certain that Bracton when he was writing did not know of the Provisions of Westminster, that he wrote therefore before October 1259. In some cases he states law inconsistent with those Provisions³; in others he ought to notice them if they be law. This would be a more thoroughly convincing argument were it not necessary to remember that there may have been moments at which some at least of Henry's judges treated the Provisions as null and void, the outcome of usurped power. Most of them were incorporated in and reenacted by the Statute of Marlborough in 1267; this would hardly have been done had they then been regarded as of indisputable authority. But Bracton would certainly have liked some of them to be law; would if he could have made them law. Thus he says that a murder fine should not be exacted in case of accidental death, but that a custom to the contrary prevails in some places⁴; the ³ Thus Prov. West. c. 14, prohibiting gifts in mortmain without the lord's consent is inconsistent with much that Bracton says; see cs-

Provisions ordain that in such a case no fine shall be due¹. Again it was one of the flagrant grievances of the time that no damages could be had in the assize of mort d'ancestor; this in many cases enabled a lord to keep out the heir for a considerable while without making compensation; this grave abuse was redressed by the Provisions²: Bracton uses strong language about it, thinks that damages should be given ad reprimendam malitiam dominorum capitalium, suggests (as it seems to me) that damages may be given, but confesses that hitherto (hucusque) they have not been given³. This is hardly the language of one who knew of the Provisions but held them invalid⁴.

No revision after 1256.

But another date can be fixed with greater certainty. I think it most unlikely that Bracton wrote a certain part of his book or ever revised the whole of it after the 9th of May 1256. The part in question relates to the essoin de malo lecti. The essoince is given a period of a year and a day for his sickness; at the end of that time he must appear. But how is the year to be reckoned; in particular what is to be done about leap year ? Bracton argues this question at length in a very curious passage⁵. The point, he admits, is disputed, but his own opinion is that in every case a year for this purpose means 365 days and 6 hours, so that the essoince will always have precisely the same space of time no matter whether a 29th of February occurs or no. A closely similar passage is found in the Note Book, and there what Bracton regards as the true doctrine is ascribed to Martin, that is, doubtless, to Martin of Pateshull⁶. Now it has long been known that the law on this point was fixed by an ordinance'. The Record Commissioners when printing that ordinance in their edition of the Statutes seem to have thought that the best authority for it was a copy in the Red Book of the Exchequer, where it is dated 9th May 1256, but that this date was questionable¹. There is much higher authority: for the ordinance, as one would naturally expect from its form, is on the Close Roll with the date just given². This fixes that date as certain. It is a close writ directed to the justices of the bench reciting that there have been differences of opinion and providing that for the future the 29th of Feb. shall be reckoned as making one day with the 28th. This decides the dispute against Bracton. But this is not all; Bracton himself was present at the making of this ordinance. The enrolment ends with these words, "This writ was provided and framed in the "presence of the king, Richard Earl of Cornwall, Richard "Earl of Gloucester, Henry of Bath, Henry de la Mare, "Henry of Bratton, Walter of Merton and others of the "King's Council." So of course Bracton knew of the writ; we may well suppose that he said all that could be said against the making of it, for it ran counter to what seems to have been a pet theory of his; but after this there can have been no doubt as to what was law.

Another indication of date must be mentioned; much Part not has been made of it by Dr Güterbock and rightly. As an ^{wrut} 1256. example of a gift dependent on a contingency Bracton takes "I give you this land if Earl Richard shall be made King of "Germany"." Now Richard was elected king in January and crowned in May 1257⁴ and it is natural to argue that he cannot have been elected, at least cannot have been erowned, when Bracton wrote this passage; it would be somewhat pointless to take as illustration of a contingency an already accomplished fact. But it is further urged that the words cannot have been written before the death of Richard's immediate predecessor, William of Holland, who did not die until January 1256. This argument though often repeated seems unsound. There was at least one earlier time at which it was probable, or (which is equally to the point) was thought probable in England, that Richard would be King or Emperor.

Already in 1250 during the lifetime of Frederick the Second the Pope having entertained Richard with marked honour, the rumour got abroad in England that Innocent would make an Emperor of the Earl¹. At the end of the year Frederick died. In his account of the next year Paris says that the Pope offered the Empire to Richard, and that Richard refused it, whereupon the Pope turned to William of Holland². For some years however he pressed the kingdom of Sicily upon the unwilling Earl; Richard he wished to have as an ally, for Richard was very wealthy³. Of course the kingdom of the Romans was not the Pope's to give, either de jure or de facto. Still just at that time to be the papal candidate or nominee was to have a good chance. It seems certain then that in 1251 Englishmen were speculating as to Richard's chance, and at any time between 1250 and the coronation in 1257 wagers may have been laid that the crafty Earl of Cornwall would despite his protestations some day wear the imperial crown. Still the year 1256 is certainly the year to which the allusion most naturally points.

Conclusions as to date.

To sum up the whole matter. The book seems to be the unfinished book of one who died in 1268, who for anything we know never published what he had written⁴, who perhaps to the hour of his death hoped to resume his task and sometimes jotted down a new note in the margin of his manuscript, who in 1258 was deprived of the rolls that he had been using, who never revised his work as a whole after 1256, who was seriously engaged on it after 1250, who relied for his law chiefly on cases decided before 1240, who regarded such cases as vetera judicia. Why he left it unfinished we cannot say; perhaps the loss of the rolls was irreparable; perhaps his duties as a hard-worked judge left him no leisure; perhaps the voice of law was silenced by the clash of arms; perhaps sweeping innovations, such as the Provisions of Westminster, demanded changes in his text which he had not the energy

§ 6. Of Bracton's Selection of Authorities.

The later the date to which the book is assigned the selection of more remarkable is Bracton's selection of authorities; but very remarkable. authorities any way this is remarkable enough. We are almost justified in saving that what he writes is a treatise on the law of England as administered by two judges, Martin Pateshull and William Raleigh. Stress must be laid on this point, for it will be of much importance hereafter; therefore of Pateshull and Raleigh a little should be said.

Martin Pateshull was from the beginning of Henry's Martin Pateshull. reign the foremost, perhaps in an untechnical sense we may say the chief, of the king's professional judges. He was not chief justiciar; that title belonged to Hubert de Burgh, who of course was no lawyer; the chief justiciarship was not a post for a lawyer, at all events for a mere lawyer. But in any list of the regular justices Pateshull's name so constantly precedes all others that he must have enjoyed some preeminence, though perhaps not of a very definite kind. He was a churchman, archdeacon of Norfolk, dean of St Paul's¹. He seems to have acquired a high reputation for learning and industry. It was hard work to go eircuit with him, so strenuous and zealous a judge was he². Rolls extant, and for the more part in print, enable us to trace his movements in eyre after eyre; from other sources we can discover but very little about him. He is nearly the first, if not the very first, Englishman, who becomes famous as a learned industrious judge and no more. He died on the 14th of Nov. 1229^s.

³ That he died in 1229 is beyond all doubt. It is a fact attested by several first-rate chronicles. See

Mat. Par. Chron. Maj. vol. 3, p. 190; Annales Monastici, vol. 1, p. 73 (Tewkesbury); vol. 3, p. 115 (Dun-staple); vol. 4, p. 421 (Worcester); Annales Londonienses, vol. 1, p. 28. But Sir Travers Twiss (vol. 1, pp. xiv-xv) has attempted to keep him

William Raleigh.

William Raleigh did not die until 1250, but his career as a judge came to an end some ten years earlier. Of him there is more to be said, since he becomes for a few years a striking figure in the history of England. He had already been for some time a judge in the royal court when the troubles of 1234 raised him to the highest place. In 1232 the king broke with Hubert de Burgh and in his stead appointed Stephen Segrave chief justiciar of the realm¹. On this followed the rising of the Earl Marshall and the delivery of Hubert from his prison at Devizes. The king was forced to dismiss his alien councillors and Segrave along with them. At Ascensiontide in 1234 the reversal of Hubert's outlawry was pronounced in a great assembly of prelates and barons by the mouth of William Raleigh. Henry did not fill up the vacant justiciarship, but it seems plain that during the few next years Raleigh was the premier judge, travelling about with the king and hearing those pleas which followed the king. He stood well with the king, was his trusted servant and councillor. We read how in 1237 the king deputed him to demand an aid from the barons², how in the same year he went on the king's behalf to watch the legatine council at St Paul's, how he sat there in his surplice and canon's cope³, for besides being treasurer of Exeter he was a canon of St Paul's⁴. But he did not long enjoy the royal favour. In 1238 the see of Winchester became empty. The king was bent on obtaining it for his wife's kinsman William of Savoy, bishop elect of Valence; but the monks wished for Raleigh, objecting to the king's candidate that he was a man of blood. Henry's angry retort alluded to Raleigh's judicial career-"He has killed more men with his tongue than the Elect of alive until 1232, on the ground that in Bracton's text (f. 50 b) a case is cited from an eyre of Pateshull in A.R. 16. "Valence has with his sword"." The monks for a time gave up Raleigh and elected Ralph Neville the king's chancellor; but the king induced the pope to quash the election. Meanwhile other chapters looked to Raleigh as to one who would make a good bishop, one to whom the king could not possibly object. In February 1239 he was elected bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, in April bishop of Norwich. He chose Norwich and was consecrated in September. But Winchester was still vacant; the monks would not have William of Savoy; nor when he died would they have Boniface of Savoy; in September 1242 they again chose Raleigh and despite the king's opposition the pope confirmed their choice.

Henry then set himself to persecute Raleigh persistently The king's and vindictively. No principle, so far as we can see, was Raleigh. involved in the persecution; the royal will had been crossed and the king was obstinate and spiteful. Raleigh would not give way; he was driven from the country. Not until 1244 could the king be reduced to reason. In the spring of that year peace was made and Raleigh returned to England. All Englishmen, says Paris, save only some of the king's clerks who had fomented the discord, were glad at his return; Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini was on their lips, for they had the highest hopes that good would come to king and kingdom from his ability and sound sense². Very soon after this we find him taking a somewhat leading part in a parliament which resisted the king's demands for money and propounded a large scheme of reforms³. But we do not learn that he became an active politician, and he seems to have lived on fairly good terms with the king⁴. In 1249 he left for France to live there frugally; he was sadly in debt, the struggle with Henry having cost him dear. He never returned to England and died at Tours in September 1250⁵.

It has been necessary to notice these things because the $\frac{Was}{Bracton's}$ question may for a moment arise whether Bracton in choosing $\frac{attachment}{to \ Naleigh}$ as one of his two highest authorities a judge who became $\frac{political}{partizanship?}$ famous for his resistance to the king, may not be betraving some political partizanship. But this seems improbable. It is true that Raleigh came to be regarded as a champion of national and ecclesiastical rights; men compared him even to Becket and to Anselm; Paris dilates on his wrongs. But there is no reason to believe that either Henry or Raleigh was contending for a theory of church or state; the quarrel was personal; the bishop had got what the king wanted. Besides (and this seems decisive) it was Raleigh the bishop, not Raleigh the judge, who withstood the king. Raleigh the judge, whose judgments Bracton cites, was the king's confidential minister. Paris, on the other hand, though he speaks highly of Raleigh's legal knowledge, ability and general character, evidently did not regard his judicial career as matter for much praise. Raleigh was a Matthew called to the apostolate from the receipt of custom; at his consecration there was joy in the presence of the angels of God over a repentant sinner¹. It can hardly then be a respect for constitutional government, a wish to curb the king, or indeed any political thought or feeling, which makes Bracton single out this judge from among all his fellows to be a father of law for all generations².

Bracton's neglect of all judges except Pates-hull and Raleigh.

Now in Bracton's pages we may count the occurrences of the names of these two judges, Pateshull and Raleigh, by the dozen; of any other judges he hardly ever speaks. The sum total of what he has to say of them is I believe this :--He mentions one case³ or perhaps two cases⁴ which came before Simon Pateshull, the great judge of John's reign, possibly a kinsman of Martin. Certain distinguished persons get named, because they accompanied Martin in some of his eyres and being of high rank were named before him in the commission, e.g. the Bishop of Durham and the Abbot of Reading; they however were not professional judges. William of York who became bishop of Salisbury is mentioned thrice¹, Roger Thurkelby perhaps once²; both of them were among the foremost judges of their time. Of Robert Lexington whose judicial career was very long we hear merely that on two occasions he erred³; of his brother John of Lexington, who at one time kept the king's seal, we hear that he also erred, and we hear no more⁴. The name of Simon of Ropelay, who occasionally took assizes, occurs once⁵; and there is notice of an attaint taken by Engelard of Cigogné and others; but Engelard the keeper of Windsor Castle was most certainly no lawyer⁶. All this is insignificantly little; or rather significantly little, for it makes Bracton's selection of authorities an extremely well marked, distinctive, selection. He is silent about his own colleagues, the men who sat with him on the bench, and of their immediate predecessors, though among them there were several who became famous as judges, in particular Gilbert Preston, Roger Thurkelby, Henry of Bath, William of York, Robert Lexington. But this is not all; having gone back to a past time he apparently picks and chooses among the judges of that time. In particular he says hardly anything of a judge who was a contemporary of Pateshull and Raleigh, who rose to a more exalted place than was attained by either of them, who certainly was an able lawyer if he was an unscrupulous politician. He hardly mentions Stephen Segrave, about whom some words are necessary since a statement directly at variance with that which has just been made is found in a book of high authority.

From the beginning of the reign Stephen Segrave has a Bracton's treatment of place among the royal judges second only to that of Pates- segrave. hull, and before Pateshull's death he was already high in the king's favour'. compassed (29 July 1232) he received the justiciarship and was associated with Des Roches, Passelew and Rievaulx in the government of the realm¹. Within two years (April 1234) the counter revolution threw him from power. He seems to have made himself very detestable to the insurgent barons and they ravaged his lands². He fled to the abbey of St Mary des Près near Leicester and found it convenient to revive a tonsure which had been long neglected³. The king called him to a strict account and for a while he remained in disgrace. He paid a heavy fine and was received back again into the royal favour. He once more became a member of the royal council⁴ and we find him taking part in its judicial proceedings; but seemingly he never served again as one of the regular judges. He died in 1241. Now certainly he was a great lawyer. A man of what was reckoned humble birth⁵, he had made his way to the very highest station, had been chief justiciar of England. Why did Bracton neglect him ?

But did Bracton neglect him? It here becomes necessary to join issue humbly and respectfully with a great historian, the highest authority on such a question, except only Bracton himself. Dr Stubbs has written thus :--- "It is a curious point.....that Bracton, although himself clearly a constitutional thinker, gives the preference in almost all cases to the decisions of Stephen Segrave, the justiciar of Henry III, who supplanted Hubert de Burgh, and was practically a tool of the foreign party. It is clear that Segrave, though a bad minister, was a first-rate lawyer⁶." Now the facts are these. Bracton mentions Segrave but eight times. Only on three occasions does he notice a difference of opinion between Segrave and any other judge. Twice the difference is between Segrave and Raleigh; Bracton does not state very clearly whose opinion he prefers: but once, as it seems to me, he agrees with Segrave¹, once with Raleigh². Once again Segrave differs from Pateshull and Bracton takes Pateshull's side³. The 'almost all cases' therefore in which Bracton gives the preference to Segrave resolve themselves into one case or possibly two cases. This is almost all the notice that is taken of a famous judge and chief justiciar, one who undoubtedly was, as Dr Stubbs calls him, a first-rate lawyer. On five other occasions his name is barely mentioned⁴. There is no one citation from the roll of any eyre on which Segrave was sent without Pateshull, though of such rolls there can have been no lack. On the other hand citations from the eyre rolls of Pateshull and Raleigh occur in great abundance. This point, of infinitesimal importance in a history of the English constitution, must be of much importance to any one who professes that he is editing Bracton's Note-Book and therefore I am constrained to insist upon it.

Various explanations may be offered, though this can be Explanations but guess-work. The apparent preference of Pateshull and choice of authorities. Raleigh may really be the result of mere chance; Bracton by some means or another got possession of Pateshull's rolls and Raleigh's rolls; Segrave's he had not got, they were at Leicester or Kenilworth; all rolls should by rights have been in the Treasury; Bracton could only use habitually such as had come to his hands by happy accident. More interesting would it be to detect some political inclination; Bracton "himself clearly a constitutional thinker" may have slighted the authority of "the tool of the foreign party". But Bracton's claim to be counted among those who sought to limit the kingly power rests mainly on a passage the authenticity of which is extremely doubtful, and William Raleigh whatever he may have become as bishop, was as judge distinctly a king's friend. More probable does it seem that the bias was not political, but juristic, that Bracton regarded Pateshull and Raleigh as the heads of a school of law and of lawyers. Of rival schools of lawyers Englishmen know little. For centuries past our scheme of justice has been so concentrated that rival schools have been impossible. Every lawyer has belonged to the one orthodox school of Westminster, or has been simply 'no lawyer'. Blackburn, Mansfield, Hale, Coke, Littleton do not found sects; Bracton himself, so far as we know, founded none. But in the first half of the thirteenth century it may well have been otherwise and it was otherwise abroad. The rapid influx of civil litigation into the royal court must have demanded a rapid development of common law: and there well may have been strong and permanent differences of opinion among judges and lawyers even about fundamentals. There may have been Proculians and Sabinians. In particular the respect to be paid to Roman law may have been a hotly contested point. We do not know how this was; perhaps we hear only one side of the case; the school of Pateshull and Raleigh still lives and is eloquent; its rivals, if rivals it had, perished for they had no spokesman to match against Bracton. Lastly we may not forget that when Bracton visits Devonshire, he chooses a Raleigh to sit with him on the bench, and that he holds land of the Raleighs. Possibly he was the pupil, the clerk, the friend of Bishop William.

At any rate the fact remains—the apparent preference of two judges of a past time above all other judges past or present. But in order to duly weigh this fact we must descend to particulars, and consider whence it was that Bracton obtained his lore of cases.

Particulars of his citations. He cites as I reekon 494 cases; this includes some vague allusions to matters of uncertain date. The nature of his citations may be seen from the following table which is approximately correct.

Citations of Coram Rege Rolls. These are much Coram Rege 2. Rolls. rarer. Bracton will say of a case vouched from such a roll that it is among the pleas which follow the king and will give the year, but no term; thus-

Eyre Rolls.

3. Citations of Eyre Rolls. In making these Bracton names the county and almost always the judge. Often he specifies no year, because to do this is needless. Pateshull, for instance, visited Yorkshire more than once; therefore it will not do to speak merely of his Yorkshire eyre; one must be more particular, must say his last eyre, or his eyre of such a year. On the other hand it is quite sufficient to speak of Raleigh's eyre in Bedford, or Leicester, or Buckingham, for (at least as principal judge) he visited those counties but once, so there can be no confusion. Here are specimens:—

...ut de Itinere Episcopi Dunholmensis et M. de P. in com. Ebor. anno Regis Henrici tertio, assisa nouae disseisinae, Si Rogerus de Halgheton. (f. 50.)

...in Itinere M. de P. anno Regis Henrici decimo in com. Ebor, de Emma quae fuit uxor Raymeri le Franceys. (f. 304*b*.)

...ut de ultimo Itinere M. de P. in com. Ebor, anno Regis Henrici xº. de quadam Juliana. (f. 298.)

Et de hac materia inueniatur in Itinere M. de Pateshulla ad assisas nouae disseisinae capiendas et gaolas deliberandas in com. North., assisa nouae disseisinae, Si Rogerus de Deneford. (f. 169.)

...ut de Itinere W. de Ralegha in com. Bedf., assisa nouae disseisinae, Si Milo. (f. 170.)

...ut de Itinere W. de Ralegha in com. Bedf., de quadam Emma Bouastra. (f. 312.)

Explanation of this classification. That the most important of the plea rolls would fall into these three classes is just what we ought to expect if we have read Bracton's account of the judicial organization of his time. There are justices travelling about under various commissions; sometimes they are sent on a general eyre ad omnia placita, sometimes their power is more limited, they are to deliver the gaols and take the assizes, sometimes they are specially authorized to take just this, that and the other particular assize. In a classification of plea rolls, the rolls of cases heard under these special commissions should form a separate class as Assize Rolls. A few exist, notably two of Bracton's and several of Preston's. But Bracton does not cite rolls of this class; they would not be first-rate authority, such assizes being taken by a single professional judge with lay associates, or sometimes by four laymen. Then there are justices residentes in banco. Lastly there are others who go about with the king, who are at the king's side. The yet extant rolls at the Public Record Office will fulfil this expectation; we find rolls of these three great classes.

Now with one exception' Bracton, I believe, cites no No ever rolls used but Evre Roll that is not a roll of Pateshull or of Raleigh. On those of Pateshull the other hand he has more than a hundred cases from and Raleigh. Pateshull's rolls, more than thirty from Raleigh's. Perhaps this fact will not seem so significant to the reader as it does to the writer of this. Therefore be it said that there must have been a very large number of other Eyre Rolls; many exist at this day; many have perished. Thus, for example, take the first eyre of the reign; judges were sent into all the counties of England except eight²; every county would have its roll; Bracton cites but one of these rolls; from the roll for Yorkshire, which county was visited by Pateshull and the Bishop of Durham, he vouches a dozen cases. Again in 1227 commissions were issued for most of the counties³; Pateshull's journey in Kent, Essex, Hertford, Norfolk and Suffolk supplies Bracton with a profuse crop of cases; Segrave was sent into six counties, other judges were sent elsewhere; Bracton culls no one case from their rolls. By 1250 the number of Eyre Rolls of Henry's reign must have amounted to a hundred and more. Of course the very fact that there were so many rolls would have obliged a text writer, even if he had access to them all, to make some choice, to study and cite just a few. What I am at present concerned to urge, is that any other text writer or student than Bracton, would very possibly have thought it best or found it convenient, to read and to cite an entirely different set of rolls; to all seeming there must have been a vast supply.

His choice of De Banco and Coram Rege Rolls.

When Bracton cites the De Banco Rolls and the Coram Rege Rolls, he does not as a general rule name the judges who heard the case. This is very natural for without their names the reference is complete and verifiable, and but seldom do their names appear upon the roll. These citations therefore do not explicitly set before us Pateshull and Raleigh as the two judges whose decisions are really sound law. Nevertheless the same principle or partizanship, caprice or accident, which governed the citation of Eyre Rolls, seems to have been at work.

Differentiation of the Courts.

We are here tempted towards the slight anachronism of speaking of a Court of King's Bench and a Court of Common Pleas. It would be but slight for the differentiation of these two courts was almost accomplished; still it is best to adhere to the terminology of the time and we do not yet read of a Common Bench and a King's Bench. To judge from the extant plea rolls it would seem that at latest from the year 1234 onwards the state of affairs was this:-Regularly every term judges sat on the Bench (in Banco) at Westminster, and the process which brought suitors before them was process compelling attendance coram justiciariis nostris apud Westmonasterium. At the same time the king was going about the country attended by judges; the process compelled attendance coram nobis ubicunque fuerimus in Anglia. What is more, there was an incipient differentiation of business; we find defendants who have been ordered to follow the king pleading to the jurisdiction and relying on the well known words of the Charter about communia placita¹; but as yet the special competence of cach court is only vaguely defined. Again, we find that errors committed by the justices in the Bench can be corrected corum ipso rege². Lastly there are two independent sets of rolls and between them there is this difference. (this will explain Bracton's method of eitation,) that the rolls of pleas in the Bench are terminal rolls, while the rolls of pleas which follow the king are annual rolls³; it may be that years immediately following 1234; I believe that this distinction soon disappears.

cases might be heard coram rege out of term as well as in term. In short we may fairly say that there were two different courts, provided that we do not take this phrase to necessarily connote two permanently distinct bodies of judges¹. The judges were the king's own servants dismissible at pleasure, and seemingly he moved them about as pleased him best. With this explanation, we may say that a Court of Common Pleas had by this time become a distinct court. There is more difficulty about saying that the pleas which followed the king were pleas in the Court of King's Bench, for the germs of what came to be three distinct jurisdictions are hardly yet to be distinguished, namely (1) the jurisdiction of the King's Bench, (2) that of the King in Council, (3) that of the King in Parliament. As a rule the cases found on the rolls of placita quae sequentur regem seem to have been heard by some of the professional judges whom the king kept by his side, occasionally by the king himself with, or possibly without, their assistance, for the notion that the king himself may not act as judge is not of Bracton's time². But sometimes we read that the case was adjudged coram consilio domini regis, and sometimes the presence of many prelates and barons, named or unnamed, is noticed and the court seems a parliament³. As yet however all these cases are enrolled on the same rolls. Whether by anticipation we call the adjudicating body Parliament, Council, or King's Bench, these cases are placita quae sequentur regem. Even distinctly legislative acts are recorded among these pleas⁴.

I have described this as being the state of affairs from Two Courts 1234 onwards. It seems possible that a definite stage in the development of the Courts should be assigned to that year. I believe that the first of the series of rolls of pleas which follow the king, is a roll extending from the summer of 1234 to the summer of 1235 (A.R. 18-19). This I mean is the first of that series which is now extant. On this fact by itself little stress should be laid, for the series after that date is very imperfect. But this is also the earliest roll of 'kingfollowing pleas' that Bracton cites', while for cases in the Bench he goes back as far as 1217. From the rolls yet preserved it may be gathered, that from the very beginning of Henry's reign there were justices sitting in the Bench every term, except when an eyre in many counties took them all away from Westminster. A large number of their rolls we have, though not a perfect set. Now the court that they held seems, in Bentham's phrase, omnicompetent. On the same roll, on the same membrane, one may find appeals of felony, writs of right, actions of debt, the peculiar commodities of the King's Bench and those of the Common Pleas. Further, especially during the King's minority, one may sometimes find it said about a case on one of these rolls, that it was adjudged coram consilio domini regis; such a case is generally one which touches royal rights². The Council certainly sat as a judicial body, but seems to have had no roll of its own; its judgments are recorded on the rolls of the Bench. So when the minority is over, on these same rolls one reads of judgments delivered coram ipso rege³. Doubtless the king when he came of age did justice in person; the doubt is whether he did it so usually and systematically that there was a separate and continuous set of rolls for cases which came before him and such judges as he might choose to have by his side. Occasionally important cases were evoked or adjourned before him, but seemingly he did not as yet make regular judicial progresses through the country, or only did so occasionally⁴.

the assizes of mort d'ancestor and novel disseisin for five particular counties should be summoned before him, Rot. Cl. vol. 2, p. 154. I have seen a fine levied before him at Leominster on what seems to have been this occasion. The Justiciar, the Chancellor, Robert Lexington, Wil-liam Fitz Warin and William of London were with him.

⁴ Already in 1226 he ordered that

Now here it should be remarked that this roll of A.R. 18-19 begins exactly at a memorable date, Whitsuntide 1234. From the beginning of the reign until 1232 Hubert de Burgh was the chief justiciar. In that year, as already said, he fell, was supplanted by Stephen Segrave. The formidable revolt of the Earl Marshall, the threats and persuasions of the bishops compelled the king to another change of mind. Just before Whitsuntide 1234 he turned against Segrave and the foreigners: Hubert and the insurgent barons were inlawed, or rather their outlawry was proclaimed a nullity. No justiciar was appointed; the king as it seems intended to be for the future his own first minister. Now it is just at this moment that begins the first yet extant roll of pleas which follow king Henry, and the first roll of that class which Bracton has cited, a roll full of reminiscences of the recent insurrection, of the misrule of Segrave and Des Roches. It looks as if the king had determined to get all the highest justice of the realm done under his own eye by professional judges who would not be too powerful, whom he could trust, whom at all events he could watch. It was a recurrence to an old practice; Henry would do what his forefathers had done; but the consequence was that thenceforth there were what we can not but call two separate tribunals, each with its own record¹.

Now Bracton cites the rolls of the Bench for almost every The Rolls term from the beginning of the reign up to and including and Coram that for Trinity 1233. I think that he certainly has a case Bracton used from Hilary 1234² and one from Easter 1234³. Here he and Raleigh. quits this series of rolls, though many later members of it there must have been when he wrote and not a few remain to this day. He turns to the rolls of pleas which followed the king and cites cases from the rolls for A. R. 19, 20, 21, 22,

¹ I find that, without knowing it, I have come to the same conclusion as Dugdale, who about this time begins to divide the judges into two classes. Mr Foss (vol. 2, p. 182), who does not appear to have looked at any plea rolls, dissents, and rightly if he only means to deny that there were two permanently constituted bodies of judges with different titles. But from this time at latest there were pleas before the king and pleas in the Bench, judges with the king and judges at the Bench, and the same judge was not in two places at once.

23, 24; in all fifteen cases. Here his continuous chain of citations is broken. After a considerable interval there come six cases from A.R. 29-33. If now we look to the list of judges who sat on 'the Bench', we find that from the beginning of the reign until the early part of 1229 Pateshull was evidently the foremost judge of the court; he sits below no one unless it chances that an Earl or the Justiciar himself, Hubert de Burgh, is present. In 1229 Pateshull died. Within a year Raleigh is on the Bench, but not as premier judge. He sits below Thomas Multon and below Stephen Segrave, but Segrave is very seldom present and Raleigh generally has the second place; at length even Multon gives way to him. Raleigh sits on the Bench until the summer of 1234, until the exact moment when Bracton ceases to cite the rolls of the Bench. Raleigh then becomes the principal judge attendant on the king's person and such he continues to be until he is made a bishop in 1239. It is almost exactly, if not quite exactly, from this period that Bracton cites pleas which followed the king; records of later date than the time when Raleigh was consecrated, these Bracton could not obtain or else he thought them of comparatively little value¹.

We have been long in coming to the Note Book. The reason for the delay was this. It was necessary to establish that Bracton's selection of rolls was very distinctive, perhaps determined by accident and necessity (for all rolls should have been in the Treasury) perhaps determined by political partizanship, juristic theories, personal friendships, but at any rate distinctive. His is a treatise on English law as administered by Pateshull and Raleigh. Not every lawyer's

He seems to have been doing justice until very shortly before his consecration in Septr. 1239. Bracton cites but a single case from A. R. 24. Raleigh's consecration took place just before the beginning of that regnal year. But some at least of these Coram Rege Rolls do not exactly cover a regnal year; they begin some months earlier. The roll for A. R. 24 I have not found.

note book would be like his note book; not every student would have had access to just the same rolls; there were many other rolls; there had been and were other great judges.

§ 7. Of the Note Book.

And now to the Note Book. It is a stout volume, about Description of the Note 11 inches high by 9 broad, wears a handsome binding and Book. carries on its back three labels thus lettered :--- | Placita et Assisae 1-24 Hen. III. | Mus. Brit. Jure Emptionis. | Externals 12,269 Plut. CLXXII. C. | The two lowest labels have been placed there since the book was acquired for the national collection, but the binding is of older date and so I am informed is the legend on the topmost label.

A vellum fly leaf at the beginning has on its front in ink— Fly-leaf. $Purch^{d}$ of Cochran 12 Feb. 1842 (from Holmes's Library of East Retford¹). On the back of this fly-leaf is written in pencil—The first two folios of the first quaternion are wanting. Each quaternion contains 12 leaves.

This last statement is not quite true. The book is now N_{umber} made up of 24 quires or quaternions of parchment; but of of quires. these two are imperfect and one is abnormally long. Each perfect quire should consist of six pieces of parchment laid one inside the other and bound together by their middles, so as to present twelve leaves and twenty-four sides. The first L_{oss} of a quire has lost its outside sheet, so that, had the pages been numbered back and front in the modern fashion, pp. 1, 2, 23, 24 would be wanting. Undoubtedly this sheet once existed and bore writing. The matter which stood on what, but for the loss, would have been the twelfth leaf (pp. 23, 24), I have been able to supply with some certainty in a manner explained below. What now is the outside sheet of this first quire is sadly damaged. Seemingly this quire was at one time lying loose from the rest of the book and suffered ill usage. The rest of the book is well preserved.

At the beginning of the second quire (top margin of what now is f. 11), there is an important legend written in what seems to me a hand of the fifteenth century. This however, most unfortunately, has been in part erased. Apparently the erasure is due to some person who, perhaps in the same century, numbered the first 34 leaves of the book. He scratched out part of the legend in question in order to make room for "fo. xj^o". Possibly a skilled palaeographer might still read the whole. What I can read is this :—

Md quod iste liber continet in se viginti quatuor quarterna et constat...... ex dimissione.....

Number of leaves.

Other losses (if any) occurred long ago.

The writer therefore seems to have known the book as containing four and twenty quires; hence we may infer that it ended then where it ends now, that nothing has been lost since his day.

The ninth quire has but eleven leaves. The extracts from a certain roll come to an end half-way down the front of the eleventh leaf; the rest of the front and the whole of the back of that leaf are blank; the tenth quire begins with a new title and extracts from a new roll. I infer that here there has been no loss, merely an economizing of parchment. The tenth quire again is ampler than the rest; it has fourteen leaves. The leaves have been recently numbered in pencil from first to last. Altogether there are 287 leaves (first quire 10 leaves, ninth quire 11 leaves, tenth quire 14 leaves, twenty-one quires of 12 leaves each, total 287 leaves). The quires begin with the leaves numbered 1, 11, 23, 35, 47, 59, 71, 83, 95, 106, 120, 132, 144, 156, 168, 180, 192, 204, 216, 228, 240, 252, 264, 276.

Seemingly when the book was originally made the quires were numbered consecutively, the number being placed in the bottom margin of the first leaf of each quire and catchwords were put at the end of each quire. These have suffered much from the binder's shears; but I see no reason to believe that anything has perished out of the middle of the book save the last leaf of the first quire. In most cases it is plain that the quires still follow each other in right order.

But the end of the book has in all probability disappeared. Probably the The text now breaks off at the very end of a quire and at book is lost. what may or may not be the end of a case. From the book itself we cannot learn whether anything has been lost. Some information on this point I shall presently supply from another quarter. That the loss is not of recent date we may gather from the already ancient statement that there were four-and-twenty quires.

The front and back of almost every leaf are covered with writing. The number of lines on a page varies considerably decreasing as we go through the book from 53 to 40. This makes the end much handsomer and more legible than the beginning.

The contents may be briefly described as transcripts of The contents entries on the judicial rolls of the first twenty-four years of Henry III. These transcripts have been made by several different scribes. Certainly there were as many as four; I think that there were five. I believe that the hand-writing of all of them may be safely ascribed to the middle of the thirteenth century or thereabouts. The extracts from the rolls do not follow each other in strict order of date. The arrangement, we may say, looks as if chronology had been tempered by catastrophes. We proceed with some regularity from earlier to later rolls and then leap back to earlier rolls which have been omitted. In some cases as we turn over the MS. we can see reasons for this procedure. A clerk, for example, has been copying pleas from the sixteenth year, and brings his work to an end in the middle of a quire; another clerk has begun another quire with pleas of the seventeenth year; here then there were three or four blank leaves which would serve for pleas from the ninth year. Having observed many small indications of this kind, it seems to me that the collection was rapidly made by some one who could command the services of several clerks. He set them to work transcribing from different rolls and pieced the book together as best he could. And there are signs of haste; in writing one part of the book two clerks constantly relieved each other at very short intervals. The work of these various copyists could not always be quite neatly fitted together; hence a few blank pages. In one case a blank thus left was afterwards utilized. Extracts from a roll for the twenty-fourth year (the latest roll used) end on f. 195 b; extracts from a roll of the second year (the earliest roll used) begin on f. 197. The interval contains in several different hands (1) the discussion of a hypothetical case, (2) a disquisition on leap-year, (3) the assize of bread, (4) two decided cases, one from the fourth, the other from the tenth year. The assize of bread is given in French, (this is the one piece of French that occurs,) and is written in what seems a later hand than any other employed upon the book. With the exception of these apparently interpolated entries, the whole collection looks as if it had been made at one time. About the middle of the thirteenth century some man had this book made for him.

The notes how written.

That man's writing may yet be seen. The margins are rich with notes. These notes are due to two different persons. One of them has written but very few. For the sake of distinction I call him "the occasional annotator", and he seems to me to have been one of the copyists. The other I call "the usual annotator". His handwriting has a strongly marked character of its own, very upright and in general very distinct, but I believe that it may be safely described as a legal hand of the middle of the 13th century. That he was a contemporary of the copyists and had the note book made for him there can be little doubt, for in a few instances he has written pieces of the text. He has written the heading which announces a new term and also the first word or two of the first entry under that heading, thus starting the transcriber on his task¹. The book then was made for him and under his eye.

A glance at my printed text will show that the marginal notes are capriciously distributed. On page after page there will be nothing in the margin, and then again for a while

 $^{^1}$ Sce f. 3, 35, 45. I think that he $\,$ second case in the book, also wrote the first few words of the almost every entry will have its note. The annotator seems to have returned to the work at several different times and made notes by fits and starts, taking up now one part of the book and now another. In some instances a case has two notes apparently made at different times. Again the comparatively few notes made by him whom I call the occasional annotator, occur in batches, chiefly in one batch (f. 50-54). They are of the same kind as the other notes, but rather less hastily written. I take him to have been an amanuensis of the usual annotator. Of the import of these notes much must be said hereafter; at present we are still concerned with externals

There are a few hasty marginal scribblings in what I take Later marto be a hand of the sixteenth or fifteenth century, just single words such as Corona and the like, showing the title under which the case would fall in an Abridgement or Digest. The person who wrote these or some contemporary of his has numbered some of the quires. About the same time too some one with the book upside down scrawled a precedent of a writ of entry on the margin of f. 285 b. At a quite recent date some one has observed in the middle of f. 145 b, that in the beginning God made man in his own image. His offence is venial compared with that of one who must be charged with having made some wanton and purposeless erasures near the beginning of the book (f. 2, 2 b, 11).

We must now pass for a moment from the British Relation of the Note Museum to the Public Record Office. For about half of the Book to the Rolls. terms from the rolls for which this book has extracts, there are no extant rolls; for about half there are extant rolls. But fortune has been capricious; in many cases there are two still extant rolls for the same term; for one term there are three. It is, I may observe, a common thing to find what Duplicate we may call duplicate or triplicate rolls. These will be rolls for the same term, recording the same cases in almost the same words; yet it will be plain that one is not a copy of the other. The same eases will be found on the two, but not in the same order. In general under each heading denoting one of the days for the return of writs, e.g. the Octave of S. Hilary, there will be found on both rolls the same cases: but not in the same order, and no rearrangement of membranes would bring the cases into the same order. Further, on a closer examination it will appear, that though the two records of one case will agree in substance, still there will often be many small verbal differences, variances such as convists do not make. And more important differences are occasionally found; in particular when both rolls agree that the parties pleaded to issue or praved judgment, one roll will and the other will not record how at a later day a judgment was given or a verdict found. Sometimes this judgment will have been given or this verdict found at a time considerably later than the term with which the roll deals, and it will be recorded on the roll by way of postscript. In short, to put the matter technically, one of the duplicates will give a Postea not to be found on the other. The origin of these duplicates seems this, that besides the principal roll kept by the protonotary, each judge had his roll kept for him by a clerk, and these rolls were used to check each other. Some cases referring to this practice occur in our Note Book and Bracton discusses what is to be done when there is discord between several rolls¹. How it comes about that the cases occur in different, often very different, order, on the different rolls, I can not here discuss. My present point is that when there is a roll extant for a certain term, we can not at once say that this roll was used by the maker of the Note Book. Most fortunately however we have other means of telling very surely which of the rolls now forthcoming were in his hands.

Marks on the margin of the Rolls connecting them with the Note Book. When having copied some pages of the Note Book, I took my transcript to the Record Office, in the hope of finding the original records, I expected that the work of hunting for my cases would be tedious. To my surprise and delight on taking up the first roll I discovered that the work was done for me. Every case that I wanted had against it a mark of an obvious, unmistakeable kind. In the margin of the roll down the whole length of the case someone had drawn a firm heavy line, in colour a dark rusty brown; to look at, it was much such a line as might have been drawn by the old fashioned red-lead pencil. I soon learnt to know that this 'scoring,' as I call it, was the work of the man who had the Note Book made for him¹.

Whenever there was a scored roll, the cases in the Note Proof of Book agreed perfectly with the cases on that roll, saving the nection. immaterial omissions, of which hereafter, and saving mere clerical blunders. When there was a roll not scored, the cases in the Note Book did not agree perfectly with the cases on that roll; the cases did not always occur in the same order; the Note Book occasionally gave Posteas which were not on the roll. I found that the copyists who wrote the Note Book had very faithfully obeyed the direction to copy implied in the scoring. Very rarely indeed did 1 find any case in the Note Book which had not been scored; so rarely, that it seemed fair to attribute the few instances to mere inadvertence or accident. More frequently a scored case had not been copied. As regards the majority of the rolls this happened so seldom that one might properly set it down to the clerk having scamped his work; only as regards two or three rolls should I say that the number of cases scored but not copied, was too considerable to be accounted for by this supposition; and about these we may perhaps hold, that the maker of the Note Book changed his mind after he had marked out the work for his scribes. In some instances the copyist has apparently obeyed what he took to be his instructions, with a slavish obedience; he has left out the important end of a case, because the mark on the roll did not go far enough, or has copied just the first lines of the next case, because the mark went a little too far².

The person who scored the rolls did not content himself words written on with this. In some instances he has numbered the membranes the rolls by the compiler at their tops, while at their bottoms he has scrawled the words Visus est, as much as to say, 'I have examined this 'sheet.' Then over against the scored cases he has sometimes written a word or two. These words are such as to show that he was collecting cases and had various categories in his Thus he writes-De recto (A Writ of Right), De dote mind. (An Action for Dower), Ass' no' (An Assize of Novel Disseisin), Quis aduoc' (An Assize of Darrein Presentment), De sum' et attach' (Summonses and Attachments, Mesne Process), De communibus (Common Form). Occasionally he even writes Error on the roll. A more important note occurs over against an action between the Prior of Merton and the men of Ewell¹. A long particularization of the villein services demanded by the Prior is on the roll. We find that this has been omitted in the Note Book where it is merely said that the Prior claimed 'certain' services. Looking again at the roll we see scribbled in big letters Loquatur mecum de hoc capitulo; the meaning seems plain—He must have a talk with me before he copies this entry and I will tell him what to leave out².

The cases are copied with omissions.

As a general rule when a case is taken from the roll it is copied into the Note Book word for word; but certain omissions, which were considered immaterial, are habitually made. The most common omission is that of the names of attorneys, jurors and the like; occasionally too when there are numerous defendants, the name of the first of them only will be copied. Such omissions are usually indicated by the use of the words talis and et infra. Thus if an assize of novel disseisin be brought against ten persons, the Note Book will say that the assize comes to recognize whether the Prior of Merton et tales, or whether the Prior of Merton et infra, disseised William Smith; et infra means that there is more upon the roll. Dates again are frequently omitted, the omission being indicated by tali die; so are the formal parts of charters and the ends of some common formulas; but in general an etc. in the Note Book represents an etc. on the roll. Only in very few instances have I noticed anything that could be called an abridging or abstracting of the entry on the roll; as a rule the entry is copied verbatim with such omissions as I have just mentioned.

The copyists have done their work fairly well, though, as The copying is fairly it seems to me, quite mechanically. They are guilty of accurate omissions and repetitions of the kind usual with those who are paid to copy what they do not care to understand. Sometimes they leave blanks to represent words which were ill written on the roll; they deal very roughly with proper names; occasionally they are guilty of very stupid blunders, for instance, one of them habitually writes sic', or even sicut in full, when he finds Ric' (Ricardus) on the roll, to the great detriment of good sense; they distribute stops in a way which shows that they do not think about the meaning of what they write. The writer of the last half of the book was, I should say, much more careful and intelligent than his fellows; his work is in general very legible and trustworthy.

Having observed the manner in which the rolls had been The missing marked, it seemed to me possible to supply the matter which from the roll. stood on one of the two lost leaves of the Note Book. As already said the outside sheet of the first quire has perished. What stood on the half of this which would have made the first leaf, I cannot say, for the Note Book now begins with extracts from a term for which no roll has been found. But the gap occasioned by the loss of the other half of this sheet. occurs in the middle of extracts from a term for which there are two rolls, and one of these is scored. The hiatus in the Note Book occurs between the middle of Case 67 and the middle of Case 68. Between these two cases I found on the scored roll eight cases which were scored. These I have copied and printed as an Appendix to my third volume. The mass of matter thus printed is considerably too long to have stood in the Note Book between Cases 67 and 68. Something must be allowed for the omissions of immaterial particulars which the copyist of the Note Book would have made; but enough cannot be allowed to bring down my

Appendix to the requisite size; perhaps then the copyist omitted one of the eight cases. That one of them was in the Note Book is made the more probable by this, that the same case at a later stage appears in another part of the Note Book, and the annotator has there written in the margin alibi supra, meaning that the same case was to be found above, which would only be true if it stood on the page now lost¹.

Part of the missing end of the Note Book might be restored.

The method employed for restoring this lost page might, I thought, be also used for determining the question, whether anything and, if anything, what, had been lost from the end of the Note Book. The process could only be applied in a one-sided fashion; it might give positive but could not give negative results. The fact that a roll was not scored, would prove nothing, for the maker of the Note Book might have had a duplicate roll. The fact that a roll was scored, would go to prove that extracts from it were once in the book; though this would not be quite certain, for the direction to copy might never have been obeyed, or the copy might have been made in some other book. A search, (I dare not say an exhaustive, but still a diligent search,) through the plea rolls of the first forty years of Henry's reign, (I must gratefully acknowledge the help given me by Mr W. F. Noble,) resulted in the discovery of but two rolls, from which there were no extracts in the Note Book, and which yet were scored in the to me familiar fashion. This result if small was satisfactory. One of these two rolls was a roll for the eyre of 1221, that eyre of Martin Pateshull and the Abbot of Reading in the mid-western counties which Bracton has made famous; the county was Worcester². Now cases from this eyre, Leicestershire and Staffordshire cases, are the last things now in the Note Book. The probability therefore seems very strong that the marks on this Worcester roll were obeyed; extracts from that roll are just what we might expect to follow cases heard in other counties during the same evre. This Worcester roll, again, has one inscription which deserves note. There is a case on it which has been disordered by the intrusion of a postscript; one ought to read what comes below before what stands above. Against this he who scored the roll has scribbled (the words are faint but legible)—primo scribatur ibi postea supra; this is a direction to the copyist to transpose two sentences. We may then conclude with some certainty that the Note Book once had extracts from this roll. The second of the two rolls now in question, was the record of the eyre of A.R. 3 in Lincolnshire, an eyre in which Pateshull apparently took part and from which Bracton cites a case¹.

What else, if anything, may have been lost from the end of the book we cannot decide: but the fact that no scored roll has been found for any year from A.R. 22 to A.R. 40 both inclusive, a period from which very many rolls are still preserved, tends towards proof that there cannot have been many extracts in the Note Book of later date than the latest of those which now appear there. Beyond A.R. 40 my search has not been systematically prosecuted, and it must be confessed that the discovery of any rolls of considerably later date, bearing marks of just the kind that has here been described, would bring some of my inferences to the ground; but having compared roll after roll, case by case, with my transcript of the Note Book, it seems to me quite certain that the marks on the rolls were put there by the compiler of the Note Book.

§ 8. Of the Relation between the Note Book and Bracton's Treatise.

It is now to be considered what reasons there are for why Bracton's Note supposing the Note Book to be Bracton's.

The comparison of handwritings is not one of the tests No proof from comthat can be applied, for we have no manuscript of Braeton's parison of handtreatise, (at least I have seen none,) that can claim to be the ^{writings.}

autograph. On the two rolls which record his labours in Devonshire as a justice of assize, there are some corrections and interpolations, which very likely were made by his hand; they seem to be just of the kind that would be made by the judge himself. There does seem to me to be much likeness between them and the notes in the Note Book; but they are too brief to be trustworthy material; the inference that Bracton made them is but an inference; I have no skill in comparing hands; therefore no stress whatever is laid upon the resemblance. As to the few words occasionally written on the margin of rolls by the person who 'scored' them, these are hasty scrawls made with some blunt instrument. and cannot be profitably compared with the notes in the Note Book. We must look then beneath the external form to the matter which our book contains, and our first argument will be founded on the choice of rolls whence extracts have been made.

The First Argument: The Selection of Rolls.

The selection of Rolls. Now speaking largely we may say that the compiler of the Note Book has used just the set of rolls that Bracton used. Such is the general result, but the comparison must descend to details, and the three classes of rolls may be taken separately.

1. Rolls of the Bench.

Rolls of the Bench.

Detailed comparison. Some difficulty is occasioned at starting by the loss of the earliest rolls of this class and the loss of the Note Book's first page. Henry III. was crowned on the 28th Oct. 1216. Almost the whole of his first year was taken up by the civil war, which was ended by the treaty of Lambeth on the 11th Sept. 1217. Thereupon a court began to sit at Westminster, and the first pleas after the war were of Michaelmas term 1217 (A.R. 1—2). Bracton had a roll for this term and the Note Book has extracts from it. But it is not for another two years, namely until Michaelmas 1219 (A.R. 3—4), that we find an extant roll. The Note Book has extracts from the roll for Easter and Trinity 1219 (A.R. 3). These are preceded by fifteen cases, the first now in the book; they have no heading because what was once the first page has disappeared. They certainly belong to the interval between Michaelmas term 1217 (A.R. 1-2) and Michaelmas term 1219 (A.R. 3-4) and they do not belong to Easter or Trinity 1219 (A.R. 3). The terms left open for them are Hilary, Easter, Trinity, Michaelmas 1218, and Hilary 1219. Their date should be fixed.

The adjournments seem to point to a Trinity term ; this The carliest rolls. among other reasons led me when I had them printed to ascribe them to Trinity 1218 (A.R. 2). Bracton cites several of them; he cites Case 5 from Trinity A.R. 2; Case 8 from term. S. Mich. A.R. 2 post guerram, that is probably from Michaelmas 1217 (A.R. 1-2); Case 12 as inter prima placita post guerram (a rather vague phrase); for what seems to be a later stage of Case 11, he vouches the roll of Michaelmas A.R. 2-3 (1218), while Case 9 is spoken of as having come before Pateshull in A.R. 2 but no term is mentioned. This evidence is somewhat perplexing; but we must remember that the same case often appears in different stages on several different rolls. Bracton cites five cases from Trinity 1218 (A.R. 2) and one from Michaelmas 1218 (A.R. 2-3), none of which are in the Note Book ; he cites no case, at least expressly, from either Hilary or Easter 1218 (A.R. 2). Again on one occasion he cites a case (f. 302) in secundo rotulo post guerram de termino S. Trinitatis. This led me at one time to believe that the Court did not sit in Hilary or Easter 1218 (A.R. 2); but on examining the feet of fines I had to abandon this notion ; the Court sat in all four terms of 1218. I now think that there was but one roll for the three first terms of that year. In the early years of the reign it is not uncommon to find a roll covering more than one term. This would explain the citation "in the second "roll after the war, from Trinity term." Also it will explain a note in the margin of the Note Book over against Case 9, namely, De term. S. Trin. ann. eodem ij^o. The annotator has probably put this somewhere about the place where the transactions of the Easter term end and those of the Trinity term begin. If that be its meaning I do not think that it is quite in the right place, for in Cases 5, 6, and 7 we read of what was done three weeks after S. John's day i.e. Midsummer. On the whole I still think that the fifteen extracts in question, or all but the first two or three, belong to Trinity A.D. 1218 (A.R. 2), but that they may well have been preceded in the Note Book by a few extracts from the Hilary and Easter terms.

In that case the maker of the Note Book had the rolls for all terms from the beginning of the reign down to and including Trinity 1218. From Michaelmas 1218 (A.R. 2-3) there are no extracts. The Court sat in that term and Bracton cites a solitary case. So this we must account an instance of Bracton having had a roll which the maker of the Note Book is not proved to have had. From Hilary 1219 (A.R. 3) we get no extracts; but Bracton cites no case; no fines have been found : an evre on a large scale was going on, and we may conclude that the Bench at Westminster was unoccupied¹.

From the next nine terms the Note Book has extracts and Bracton has citations. We pass therefore unchecked to Trinity 1221 (A.R. 5). From this the Note Book has nothing. Bracton apparently has one case. But I have found no roll and no fines and think it very doubtful whether the Court On the morrow of Trinity, Pateshull, Hareng and sat. Lexington, three of the usual judges of the Bench, began an evre in the west which seems to have kept them away throughout the summer and far into the autumn².

From the next term again, Michaelmas 1221 (A.R. 5-6) there is nothing in the Note Book. Bracton does not cite any cases distinctly from Mich. A.R. 5-6; but he cites eight from Mich. A.R. 6. This seems at first sight ambiguous; but six out of the eight are essoin cases which would, I suppose, be adjudged on the first days of the term, and I infer therefore Pleas of the Crown for the County of Gloucester, A.D. 1221.

¹ See the letters of 26th Jan. 19 in Foedera, vol. 1. p. 154. ² I have spoken of this eyre in that the term to which they belong is Michaelmas 6-7; the essoins of that term would be taken before the coronation day.

The next term for which the Note Book has nothing is Trinity 1223 (A.R. 7) and from this Bracton vouches two cases. No roll has been found and no fines; but Bracton's citations are perhaps correct.

Term now follows term in the Note Book until Trinity A.R. 10 is reached. That and the next two terms are unrepresented. So they are in the treatise also. No roll is extant and I have seen no fines. Probably the Court did not sit; a great eyre¹ was taxing the judicial resources. In the Note Book the pleas for the next term, Easter 1227 (A.R. 11) are described as 'Placita...post reditum insticiariorum de itinere²'. On these follow cases from Trinity term of the same year, but it seems clear³ that after these the Note Book proceeds to give without any new heading, (the omission may be due to mere carelessness,) cases from the Hilary and Easter terms of 1228 (A.R. 12). Thus a leap is made over Michaelmas 1227 (A.R. 11-12). From that term Bracton draws no case; I have found neither roll nor fine; an evre in many counties was begun in September⁴; probably the Bench was without an occupant. Trinity 1228 (A.R. 12) is unrepresented in the Note Book, the treatise, the rolls, the fines.

No cheek now occurs until Hilary 1232 (A.R. 16). Bracton has one citation; the Note Book no extract; no roll is found, but there were judges taking fines at Westminster and at times Raleigh was of them. As to the Trinity term of the same year we are everywhere met by negatives; no extracts; no citations; no roll; no fines. This was the time when Raleigh made that tour in the midlands which supplied Bracton with many decisions. The Note Book has nothing from Easter 1233; but Bracton has nothing from this term; apparently a Court was sitting at Westminster, but Raleigh was not there. Without any break the Note Book has extracts from the four next terms, ending with Easter 1234 (A.D. 18). This is the last roll from which it gives extracts and with it Bracton's continuous series of citations from the rolls of the Bench comes to an end.

Summary as To sum up then, the Note Book has carried of the Bench. rolls from which Bracton took his cases, except four viz. that To sum up then, the Note Book has extracts from all the for Michaelmas 1218 (A.R. 2-3) from which one case is vouched, that for Trinity 1221 (A.R. 5) from which one case is vouched, that for Trinity 1223 (A.R. 7) from which there are two citations, that for Hilary 1232 (A.R. 16) which yields a solitary case. This list of exceptions might perhaps be yet further reduced, for it seems doubtful whether the Court sat in Trinity 1221 or Trinity 1232, and very possible that the apparent mention of those terms in the treatise is due to some mistake of the author, his copyists or editors. But taking things as they stand, it is plain that if Bracton had rolls from these four terms he has used them very sparingly.

> Rolls of pleas which followed the King. 2.

Pleas which followed the king.

As regards the rolls of pleas which followed the King the case is very simple; Bracton and the maker of the Note Book had just the same six consecutive rolls.

3. Eyre Rolls.

Eyre Rolls.

The Eyre Rolls cannot be so briefly dismissed. Bracton had about twenty eyre rolls of Pateshull and five of Raleigh. The Note Book gives selections from but eight rolls, all of them are rolls of Pateshull, all save one of them are rolls used by Bracton. These selections from eyre rolls are the last things in the Note Book. We have above seen reason for believing that the end of that book has perished, also for believing that the part that has perished comprised extracts from the Worcester eyre roll of 1221 and the Lincoln eyre roll of 1219. To both of these Bracton has appealed for cases. There is nothing, as it seems to me, to be said against the supposition that, were the Note Book as complete as once it was, it would give us extracts from all the eyre rolls cited by Bracton. But then there is nothing to be said for that supposition. Such rolls as are extant give us no aid, for unfortunately, with I believe five exceptions, just those rolls which we would gladly examine are not to be had; not one of Raleigh's eyre rolls is forthcoming. The exceptions consist of five rolls from the memorable eyre of 1221, one from Shropshire, two from Warwick, two from Gloucester. None of them is scored; but no inference can be drawn from this, for as already said, there were often duplicate and triplicate rolls.

But now reviewing our comparison as a whole, the result Summary as to the selection by no means conclusive must arouse the belief that tion of rolls. Bracton and the maker of the Note Book were but one person. Both begin collecting cases from the rolls of the Bench at the same point. Both at the same point cease taking cases from the rolls of the Bench and begin taking eases from the rolls of pleas which follow the king. Of rolls of the latter kind both use precisely the same six, the six which just cover the time when William Raleigh held the placita coram rege. Both, working years after Pateshull was in his grave, seem either to treat the rolls of his eyres as the best of all eyre rolls, or to happen to have those particular rolls ready to hand. But we must pass to another argument.

The Second Argument: The Selection of Cases.

If all or almost all the cases cited by Bracton were found The selection of cases. in our manuscript, we might say with some confidence that this was not the result of chance. It should here be explained that only a small part of the matter which appears on any roll has been copied into the Note Book; only the cases which were thought of more than usual interest have been taken. The proportion borne by the selected cases to the whole mass of matter on the rolls varies greatly from roll to roll. It cannot be estimated very accurately, but taking one roll with another I should say that not more than a tenth part has been copied. Now that so small a selection should comprise all Bracton's cases and yet that Bracton should have had nothing to do with the choice, would be most unlikely. A calculation of chances is indeed impossible for some cases were doubtless more interesting than others, and a certain agreement between different lawyers as to what cases were of most value might be expected : still the coincidence would be so remarkable that we might reasonably infer that it was not fortuitous.

Difficulty in identifying cases.

But our case is by no means so strong as that here supposed. As already explained, the Note Book has no selections from a considerable number of rolls, mostly evre rolls, used by Bracton. But considering only those rolls from which there are extracts in the Note Book, the result to which I have come is, that among these extracts there are rather more than half the cases which Bracton vouches from the same rolls¹. Some allowance must be made for mistakes of mine. I may well have failed to identify some of Bracton's cases. The proper names which occur in his text have been horribly distorted by copyists, for example an Archdeacon of Totness (Archidiaconus de Tottona) has become Alfridus de Cottone and Viel D'Engaine (Vitalis de Engaine) has become the Vicar of Gaine; this throws difficulties in one's way. Again a good many cases Bracton cites anonymously, that is to say, he merely states that a case about this or that matter will be found on a particular roll, but does not name the parties. It is sometimes hard for a modern to be certain whether he has found such a case; and if any mistake has been made by copyist or printer in giving the date, the case will hardly be found. That such mistakes have occurred is certain; still I would not attribute to them any weighty influence on the general result now under our consideration. Certainly not a few of the cases, which Bracton has cited and which yet are not in the Note Book, may be found just where they ought to be, on the rolls whence they are cited by the Bracton of the printed book; others I have not found; but on the whole considering how badly proper names have fared, 1 have been surprised at the safety with which dates have passed through the hands of transcribers.

Altogether Bracton cites just about 500 cases and 1 be- Results lieve that just about 200 of them will be found in this book, parison. which contains in all just about 2000 cases, so that every tenth case in it or thereabouts has been cited by Bracton. This result, though it may not strengthen, will not I think weaken the argument founded on the selection of rolls made alike by Bracton and by the owner of the Note Book. Of course we cannot argue that when writing his treatise Bracton was wholly dependent on this book for his authorities. But we have known all along that this could hardly be true. Not until 1258 was he bidden to surrender the rolls which were in his possession, while probably he had finished the main part of his text two or three years before that date. We may guess perhaps that he had another note book with other eases in it. At the beginning of one set of extracts in our MS, there is written in the margin De hoc termino nichil alibi, and this suggests that the owner had somewhere else another collection of authorities.

But the reader may ask, What need had Bracton of any why did Bracton want transcripts of cases if the very rolls themselves were in his a Note Book hands? The answer is, that, even with the aid of a note $\frac{Rolls}{Rolls}$? book, his feat of citing some five hundred eases scattered about in some fifty rolls was a gigantic feat of patience, industry, memory, and that without some such aid the feat would have been impossible. Imagine fifty rolls, each composed of twenty or thirty membranes, each membrane as long as one's arm, as broad as one's span, each membrane covered back and front with writing, whereon are no headnotes, no catch-words, nothing to guide the eye save the names of counties in the margin. Such was the raw material; to have transplanted five hundred cases directly out of this disorderly mass into their proper places in a systematic exposition of the law, would have been beyond the power of any man. Bracton, we may surely say, though he had the rolls themselves would have wanted a note book or several note books. Of course however we may not leap from this inference to the assertion that his note book or one of his note books has come to our hands, and it must be frankly admitted that had we no other evidence than what has already come before us, any such assertion would be rash; we might speak of 'curious coincidences,' say that 'not 'impossibly' this book was Bracton's, but beyond this we could not go.

Treatise and Note Book are alike unique. Still the uniqueness of the treatise, the uniqueness of the Note Book should be had in mind. It is not as though we argued—' Here is a note book containing very many of the 'cases cited in "Sugden on Powers"; it must have belonged to 'Lord St Leonards.' Bracton's treatise with its five hundred citations stands quite alone. He is the one and only man of his time whom we know to have collected cases from the records. His successors, Britton and Fleta, abridging his work to meet the demands of lawyers, omit the citations. Of the uniqueness of the Note Book we may not speak quite so positively; still nothing of the same sort has yet been made public. We are dealing with rarities; with an unique treatise, with a collection of eases which, so far as we know, is unique; one in every ten of the cases in the latter is cited in the former; this is not an insignificant result.

The Third Argument: The Relation between Passages in the Treatise and Marginal Notes in the Note Book.

Marginalia in the Note Book. We pass now to evidence of a more interesting kind, that offered by the notes in the margin of our book, and, leaving Bracton out of sight for a while, something should first be said of their nature and their date.

One part of the annotator's work no printed version could adequately represent. Many of the cases he must have studied carefully, pen in hand. In the manuscript one may see how he has touched up badly formed letters, corrected here and there a false concord, and 'expuncted' redundant words. When he has interpolated anything into the text attention will be drawn to the fact by a foot-note. Such interpolations are not very uncommon. Sometimes a word which obviously was missing, for instance an all-important non, has been supplied; sometimes a proper name is inserted so as to explain an ambiguous ipse, ille, snum: sometimes a link of reasoning is introduced; but generally if there is much to be said, this is said in the margin.

His marginalia fall into three main classes. The largest Nature consists of brief statements in general terms of the point Marginalia. decided by the case; statements not unlike the head notes of our modern reports. Occasionally we find mere catchwords which refer either to the matter of the case or the names of the parties, thus, 'Bastardia,' 'De fine facto,' 'De Bello Monte,' 'Gorges.' A much smaller but more valuable class is made up of criticisms and speculations; thus the word 'Error' marks the decision as bad law; sometimes a reason is given for its condemnation, sometimes not; praise is bestowed by 'Bonum,' 'Optimum,' 'Magnum et bonum recordum,' and the like; it is noted that since the case was decided the Statute of Merton has altered the law; or again the annotator speculates as to what would have been the judgment had the facts been rather different. In a third and smallest class we must place what seem to be references to other cases; a name is written which is not the name of any of the parties to the case against which the note is made. thus 'Nota Whitcherche,' 'Nota Corbyn,' 'Casus Radulphi de Arundelle similis isti,' 'Fere casus Cole.' Such allusions as these are enigmas to be discussed hereafter. The meaning of the other notes will in general be plain to a reader who has first studied the cases, but hardly to one who has not, for the notes are mere notes, intended for no eye but the annotator's and often have little or no grammatical structure.

The date when the book was compiled we cannot fix with Date of the Note Book. perfect accuracy; but we cannot go far wrong. It cannot have been earlier than the year 1240; a plea roll of A.R. 24 is the last of the series of rolls whence excerpts have been taken. On the other hand it can hardly have been later than 1256. There are two passages which to all appearance were copied on a blank page of the book after that book had come into existence. The first of these is a disquisition on leap year; and this is followed immediately by the second, which is an assize of bread¹. The former is an elaborate argument in favour of what we know to have been Bracton's contention as to the true method of reckoning 'year and day,' when an essoince is privileged to keep his bed for that period. We know also that on the 9th of May 1256, in Bracton's presence, the king and council over-ruled this contention, ordained that a 29th of February should be reckoned as forming but one day with the 28th². It is improbable that after this any lawyer was at pains to set down in writing a long reasoned statement of a doctrine which had been thus exploded. The tariff known as the assize of bread there is reason for attributing to this same year, 1256; under that date the Annals of Burton relate that the justices who were sent throughout England to correct the weights and measures, published this assize³. The Annals give the document in Latin, the Note Book in French; but the tariff is the same. The appearance of a French document may cause a momentary suspicion as to whether this part of the Note Book was written so early as 1256; but this suspicion will be allayed when it is remembered that in 1258 the king's adhesion to the Provisions of Oxford was proclaimed in French as well as in English and Latin; indeed this is just the moment when French is taking its place beside Latin as a language for laws. Now the occurrence of these two documents one after the other, must suggest that they were copied into the Note Book in 1256 or thereabouts. The assize of bread was just being published and the problem of the bissextile was a warmly debated question pressing for an authoritative answer. The rest of the Note Book's text may have been transcribed some years earlier; but not before 1240.

Date of the marginal notes, The date of the marginal notes is of course a different matter. They may have been written at intervals during a space of several years; but they cannot well be of much later date than the text. In the first place, it seems clear from evidence already mentioned that the annotator himself presided over and interfered with the work of the copyists¹. In the second place, his writing would I believe be attributed by any expert much rather to the reign of Henry III. than to that of any Edward. In the third place, he thrice refers to changes in the law made by the Statute of Merton (1236) which once he calls 'noua gracia²,' while he never expressly refers to any later legislation. To say that he never betrays knowledge of any more recent statute or ordinance, would perhaps be an assertion which no man now living is entitled to make; I dare say no more than that such betraval, if any there be, has escaped me; but by means of footnotes referring to Bracton's text, I have tried to ease the task of any reader who will be at pains to consider this matter for himself. Now it seems improbable that any lawyer of a later time would have written all these notes without alluding, and that clearly, to such comprehensive enactments as the Statute of Marlborough (1267) or the Provisions of Westminster (1259), highly improbable that a lawyer of Edward's day would not have noticed that sweeping code which we know as the Statute of Westminster the First. Lastly, indications of date should be given by the names of cases noted in the margin, by such allusions as 'fere casus Cole' and the like. Such success as I have had in deciphering these indications shall be described below: nothing has been found inconsistent with the conclusion for which I am now arguing. In only two instances has the annotator given us any easy means of settling a date. Twice and no more he names the judge who decided the case to which he alludes: in the one he names William of Wilton who was slain at Lewes (1264) and who first appears as a judge in 1247; in the other he names 'H. de Bratton,' a judge of whose history we have already said something, and to whom we now return.

Now the resemblances between the notes and passages in Coincidences Bracton's text are many and striking. But let us not make with the too much of this. Having come to the conclusion that Bracton and the annotator are contemporaries we shall expect that they will in many instances say much the same things; for both are English lawyers, both are dealing with the same subjects, both are often discussing the very same decisions. The minds of all lawyers ought, it may be said, to be very much alike, for there is a strict legal orthodoxy, from which he who departeth doth surely err; even verbal agreement will be frequent for the legal vocabulary is small. Perhaps there was much less agreement among the good lawyers of the thirteenth century about elements of the law than there would be among good lawyers of our own day; still coincidences if they are to prove anything must not consist merely in the statement of the same rules of law in the same or very similar words. Consequently no attempt will be made to collect here the numerous instances in which Bracton and the annotator say the same things; when this happens attention is drawn to it by a foot-note; but a few examples will now be noticed in which the agreement is of such a kind, that, when they are taken all together and in conjunction with the evidence already discussed, they make a strong case for holding that Bracton and the annotator were but one man.

Examples.

Trussel's Case and William Briwere.

(1) Bracton' treating of the cases in which a donor is not bound to warrant a donee, says that the terms of the gift may except certain particular persons from the scope of the warranty, as e.g. if I say "I and my heirs will warrant against all the world except so and so." To prove that such an exception will be effectual, he cites from the Warwick evre (A. D. 1221) of the Abbot of Reading and Martin Pateshull an assize of mort d'ancestor, Si Willelmus Trussell. He immediately adds that the donor may not be bound to warranty even though he has received the donee's homage; warranty may be excluded by the terms of the gift, as e.g. if the charter says, that in case the donce be impleaded, the donor shall not be bound to warrant or give an exchange, "sicut de Willelmo de Bruere in multis cartis suis." These last words refer doubtless to the William Briwere, who when he died an old man in 1226, had for some forty years been a ¹ Br. f. 390 b.

trusted royal servant, had amassed great wealth and liberally endowed religious houses, especially in the west country¹.

Now in the Note Book² we find the assize Si Willelmus Trussel, not indeed at the stage at which Bracton cites it, but at a later stage, when it came before the Bench. The case had nothing to do with William Briwere. The charter then in question was one granted by Amicia mother of William Basset to Hugh of Chawcombe with an express saving of the rights of the heirs of William Trussel. It was decided that under this deed Basset was not bound to warrant Chawcombe against Trussel's heirs. The annotator states in the margin the rule involved in this decision. He then adds, "It will be the same if homage be taken 'saving the right of "every one,' or with an express exclusion of warranty secun-"dum W. Briwerre."

This connection then of Trussel's case with Briwere's opinion or practice as to the receipt of homage, we find both in the treatise and in the Note Book, and the coincidence is of a very striking kind, particularly when we reflect that Briwere died some twenty years before either book can have been compiled. With Briwere's transactions Bracton may well have been familiar; his son, William Briwere the younger, was bishop of Exeter from 1224 to 1244, and a judge who took the Devonshire assizes would often have seen the charters of the founder of Dunkeswell, Torre and Polslo. Still the number of lawyers living between 1250 and 1260 to whom Trussel's case would have recalled Briwere's name cannot, one would suppose, have been very large, even if it was a very uncommon thing for a donor to expressly stipulate that the receipt of homage should imply no warranty.

(2) The formula of novel disseisin inquires of the recog- Juste propter nitors whether the plaintiff has been disseised iniuste et sine instead in iniuste et sine judicio. This might suggest that it is possible to disseise a person sine judicio and yet not iniuste. Such however is not, as it seems to me, Bracton's doctrine. Whenever a person is

¹ In my note vol. 1, p. 159 I have called him Brewer. I must beg his pardon. He was of Norman family and the full form of his name was disseised without a judgment, he is disseised unjustly. The strictly limited cases in which a disseisor may be lawfully ejected by the true owner flagrante disseisina, are met by the theory that in such cases the true owner has not yet lost seisin in law (possessio civilis), though he has lost seisin in deed (possessio naturalis); so that here the disseisor is not even disseised, much less unjustly disseised. Suppose then that the true owner be thoroughly dispossessed, that the time for self-help is past; he disseises his disseisor; shall we say that he has done this iniuste? Bracton gives his answer in these words¹, "Juste facie prima propter jus, sed iniuste propter iniuriam, quia sine judicio" (Justly if we regard only the right of property, but unjustly because of the injury to possession). This jingling gloss we find in the Note Book also and in the same context²:---"Juste propter jus, set iniuste quia sine judicio." Justices are convicted of false judgment, jurors of perjury, because they do not observe the true theory of possessory actions, and think that a man may be disseised without a judgment and yet not unjustly.

Montacute v. Bestenore.

(3) Careful readers of Bracton's treatise will perhaps remember his citation of Montacute v. Bestenore3, first because it brings out clearly the difference between villein status and villein tenure, secondly because it suggests that the judges of 1219 considered that a tenant in villeinage holding by services of the most 'villeinous' kind, including merchet and uncertain tallage, could not lawfully be ejected by the lord so long as he performed the villein services. This very interesting case is in the Note Book⁴. The judges held that Bestenore was a free man though he held in Now both Bracton and the annotator comvilleinage. menting on this case find the distinction between villein tenure and villein status in the fact that the free man who holds in villeinage can leave his tenement if he pleases; "quia potest relinquere tenementum," says the annotator; "quia poterit relinquere villenagium et ut liber homo recedere," says Bracton. About leaving the land, the record itself says nothing.

(4) This case occurs in the Note Book¹:—The Abbot of Ripton r. Ramsey disseises Richard of Ripton; Richard brings an Abbot of Ramsey. assize, but before the case is heard has recourse to self-help and disselses the Abbot. The Abbot pleads no special plea; the assize proceeds and the facts are found. The judgment is that Richard has recovered his seisin and that the Abbot be amerced, but that Richard also be amerced for the usurpation. Commenting on this case the annotator speculates as to what would have happened if the Abbot had brought an assize :-- "I believe," he says, "that the latter "assize (the Abbot's) shall proceed, and the former assize "(Richard's) is extinguished and annulled as a penalty for "having taken the law into his own hands when he should "have recovered by judgment." Bracton² cites this case and indulges in a similar speculation; he even thinks that in Richard's assize it was open to the Abbot to counterclaim (agere de reconuentione) and so recover seisin. The case itself, we may notice, does not prove that the Abbot could, either by cross action or by counterclaim, have reobtained possession; but it suggested the same speculation to the annotator and to Bracton.

(5) Still more to our point is the following. Bracton³ A tenement says that the obligation of the donor to warrant the donee warranty. may not be a merely personal obligation, it may bind some tenement, that is to say, the burden of the contract may 'run with' land of the donor and bind that land in the hands of a purchaser. "A tenement may be thus bound expressly or tacitly; expressly, as if it be said in the deed of gift 'I and my heirs will warrant this gift out of such and such 'a tenement into whosesoever hands it may come,' in which case the thing is expressly bound to warranty, as is shown by the case concerning R. de Renge, Pasch. A. R. 16 com. Mid.; tacitly, as if the feoffor has at the time of the gift assets for the warranty, in which case, even without express words, what he then has is bound; for a personal obligation is of no avail unless the person bound has property out of which he can make the exchange in case of need." Now I understand Bracton to mean by this, that on principle the warranty should always be treated as binding not only the warrantor's person but also all the lands that he has when he makes the contract, whether anything be expressly said on this point or no; for a warranty would be a useless thing if the warrantor could for all practical purposes destroy it by conveying away his property to others. But Bracton has not got a case that goes nearly this length; his authority goes no further than the point that by express bargain the burden of the warranty may be imposed upon a specific tenement.

The case that he cites is easily recognizable in the Note Book¹; it shows how a house in London was expressly bound to warrant land at Stepney. It interested the annotator; on two occasions has he marked it as Optimum; meditating over it pen in hand he has drawn a helmeted head. The result of his meditation is a note to the effect that 'from this ease it would seem that as the property that 'a donor or vendor has on the day of the sale may be 'expressly bound by the warranty, so it may be tacitly 'bound, for a warranty is of no avail unless the warrantor 'has property whence he can make the warranty and the 'exchange.' Nay, the two writers (if two they were) use almost the same words:—

Bracton—quia non valet obligatio personae nisi habeat si opus fuerit unde possit excambium facere.

The Annotator—quia non valet warantia nisi habeat unde possit warantiam facere et escambium.

Now this piece of reasoning makes what must seem to us a very rash transition from 'This can be done by express bargain,' to 'This always is done by tacit bargain.' Both writers give it; both argue in the same way, in the same phrase, that this must be so otherwise warranties will be of little worth. Further though there are a very few traces in later books of the rule that specific land might by express words be subjected to the burden of warranty, the much wider doctrine as to the tacit obligation, never became, so far as we know, part of the common law¹.

(6) Next we may note a coincidence which caught The Statute of Merton, Vinogradoff's eye. Bracton² says that formerly the doweress had no power to bequeath the growing crop. The change in the law made by the Statute or Provisions of Merton he then states thus :--- "sed noua superveniente gratia et provi-"sione.....poterit uxor de fructibus et bladis.....testari et "pro voluntate sua disponere." Against a case³ decided under the old law the annotator has written thus :-- "Modo "mutatum est de noua gracia quod potest testamentum "facere de blado firmo in terra." This coincidence in the use of the phrase noua gracia, which lies a little outside the lawyer's everyday stock of words, will seem the more striking when it is said that both Bracton and the annotator speak of the Provisions on other occasions without using this or any similar phrase.

(7) On f. 26 b. Bracton speaks of a particular class of Terminus gifts, namely gifts made to the donee until (quousque vel se indeterminants. donec) some other provision shall be made for him. He points out the distinctions which will arise according as the heirs of the donor, and again the heirs of the donee, are or are not mentioned. Four cases are possible (1) 'until I 'provide for you,' (2) 'until I or my heirs provide for you,' (3) 'until I provide for you or your heirs,' (4) 'until I or my 'heirs provide for you or your heirs.' He then passes on to speak about estates pur autre vie, gifts to the donee for the life of the donor, and then touches on gifts for terms of years. And here he has this phrase :- "Si autem fiat donatio ad

"terminum annorum, quamuis longissimum, qui excedit "vitas hominum, tamen ex hoc non habebit donatorius "liberum tenementum, cum terminus annorum certus sit et "determinatus, et terminus vitae incertus, et quia licet "nihil certius sit morte, nihil tamen incertius est hora "mortis." All the matter here described occurs in the space of a single page.

In the Note Book there is a case¹ which interested the annotator a great deal. It concerns Stephen Segrave. The fallen favourite was sued by the king for certain manors. The case seems to have been that King John had given these manors to David Earl of Huntingdon until (quousque) King John should make other provision for Earl David, and that Segrave derived such title as he had from Earl John heir of Earl David. Judgment, it seems from a note which the annotator himself has interpolated, was given for Segrave. The report is not so full as might be wished; but the annotator suggests that the case turned on this, that the king had never made another provision for Earl David himself and that nothing had been said about any provision being made for Earl David's heirs; "prouisio non tetigit "haeredes." He thinks with Bracton that if the clause be 'until I provide for you,' then after your death your heir will have a fee in the land not to be defeated by my tendering him other lands. Incidentally too he notices, as Bracton does, that quousque and donec are equivalent terms. But he adds another note which must be quoted in full-" Terminus "terminans set indeterminatus et incertus, et ideo liberum "tenementum sicut ad vitam hominis (a gift to you until I "otherwise provide for you, gives you the freehold, for though "a term is set to your estate, it is an uncertain term, such as "is set to the estate of every tenant for life), quia nichil "certius morte, nichil incertius hora mortis."

These are Bracton's very words, and the coincidence seems particularly remarkable, for Bracton introduces this phrase about the certainty of death the uncertainty of the hour of death, immediately after he has been discussing.

what the annotator thought was the point of Segrave's case, namely the effect of such words as 'until I otherwise provide 'for you.'

(8) The two books contain two very similar disquisitions year and as to the meaning of 'a year and a day'.' Both writers maintain that the 'year' is always 365 days and 6 hours; that a leap year makes no difference; both argue against the contrary opinion; it is a mistake caused by the interpolation of an additional day in every fourth year; that day is interpolated to prevent the absurdity of keeping Christmas in the summer and the Nativity of the Baptist in the winter; no such absurdity would be caused by holding that the essoince's 'year' is always the same; both compare the year of 365 days to a snake without a tail, the year of 365 days and 6 hours to a snake with its tail in its mouth; both think it necessary to preface their argument with some general considerations about the length of years, months, weeks, days, hours and moments. In short, it is not too much to say that the two disquisitions are substantially the same; both maintain by the same arguments, in the same phrases, a doctrine, which even if it ever was uncontroverted law, was abolished in 1256.

(9) In the Note Book the argument about leap year is The dual seisin. immediately preceded by the discussion of a hypothetical case². I will ask any reader who is familiar with Bracton's mode of thought and strain of language, and who is also familiar with the terminology of the rolls, whether this discussion is not extremely like Bracton's work. It concerns a matter which seems to have given him a great deal of trouble, namely the dual possession, or dual seisin, of free-holder and termor. For each of them has a legally protected possession or seisin, the one protected by the assize, the other by the quare ejecit infra terminum. How can one represent this in theory; how can one do so in the reasonable Roman terms that one finds in Azo's book? The discussion in the Note Book deals with a problem which raises this question. The writer introduces the doctrine of two concurrent possessions quia simul stare possunt seisina proprietarii et firmarii, unius quantum ad liberum tenementum et alterius quantum ad usumfructum.

Bracton more than once states this theory

[•] quia bene sese compatiuntur de eadem re duae possessiones, dum tamen ex diuersis causis.....quia ususfructus per se stare potest in persona unius, et liberum tenementum per se in persona alterius (f. 44 b.).

quia sese compatiuntur terminus et feoffamentum de eadem terra, quia ibi sunt diuersa jura; ad feoffatum vero pertinet proprietas feodi et liberum tenementum, firmarius vero nihil sibi vendicare poterit nisi usum fructuum (f. 27).

poterit enim quilibet illorum sine praeiudicio alterius in seisina esse eiusdem tenementi, unus ut de termino et alius ut de feodo et libero tenemento (f. 220 b.).

Further it will be observed that the writer of the passage in the Note Book uses the words proprietarius and usus*fructus.* Now it may, I believe, be denied with much confidence that these were terms of English law. I have copied near two thousand cases without having once had to write either of them. The tenant for years never has a usufruct, the freeholder never is a proprietor. Such terms belong not to the language in which lawyers plead, in which justices deliver judgment, they belong to the language of the rationalistic jurist who has come under romanesque influence, who will expound English law according to the best modern ideas. To say that no man but one could have written this passage, would be absurd enough; still we may say that of the only two passages in the Note Book in which there is anything that can be called a sustained argument, this one about the double seisin, states a theory which Bracton held in the terms which Bracton used, which were not the technical terms of English law, while the other is the dissertation on leap-year, the relation of which to a passage in Bracton's text is curiously intimate.

It will probably be allowed that these nine examples summary. (which of course have been chosen as being the best) bring the work of the annotator very near to the work of Bracton. Still it might be rash to infer that the annotator and Bracton were one. They may have been two close friends, two members of the same school, perhaps pupil and master, interested in just the same problems of jurisprudence, solving such problems in the same way, in the same terms; they may have discussed together the bearing of Trussel's case on the charters of William Briwere, have talked over the binding of land by warranty, have heard Martin Pateshull expound the true theory of 'year and day,' have learned from each other or from their common preceptor the 'Juste 'propter jus sed iniuste propter iniuriam,' the 'Nihil certius 'morte, nihil incertius hora mortis;' the theory of the dual seisin, the terms 'proprietor' and 'usufruct' may have belonged to a school, a school of speculative lawyers who strove to reconcile English law with Rome and Reason. Less theoretic, more purely personal, links must be found between these two writers, before the connection will have become so close that we must acknowledge them to be not two, but one Bracton.

The Third Argument: The Cases 'noted up' in the margin of the Note Book.

We turn now to the most enigmatical class of notes, those The cases namely which seem to be allusions to cases which are not in the Note Book. Often such notes consist of just a proper name and no more. All the notes of this class shall here be collected, and we will inquire whether there are any reasons for connecting Bracton with the cases, which have thus been 'noted up.'

 Against an action for dower' we find this note:— Ermeiard et herede de Hokesham.

Now on the 13th December 1255, as we may learn from ^{Ermengard} and the heir of Huxham.

an inquest post mortem¹, died William of Hockesham or Hoggesham, that is of Huxham near Exeter, leaving a son four years old. The wardship, however, of this child was worth nothing, because the father shortly before his death gave his land at Huxham to William "de Punchard," as the jurors call one whom we may easily identify with William of Punchardon. Punchardon lies in the parish of Kentisbere some ten miles as the crow flies from Huxham². The reader may possibly remember that William of Punchardon married Ermengard widow of Thomas of Saunton, and with his wife brought an action for her dower against one Henry of Bratton³. That Bracton had dealings with Ermengard is established, that Ermengard had trouble with the heir of Huxham whose father had enfeoffed her husband, is very probable. This is how I would explain the note Ermeiard et herede de Hokesham. It is a note about a case affecting a lady whom the annotator knew so well that he did not give her a surname.

Apart from this very conclusive evidence, it may be shown that Bracton had cause to know something of both the families concerned in this case. A case concerning William of Punchardon, Henry Tracey and the heir of Roger Beaupel is cited without date in the printed treatise, and the MSS. prove that this citation was originally a marginal note⁴. William of Punchardon sat with Bracton as a justice of assize⁵. In 1257 Bracton was appointed to take an assize concerning land at Huxham, to which William of Punchardon was party⁶. Ermengard was convicted before Bracton of a disseisin perpetrated at Cheriton⁷. In 1262 Bracton was commissioned for an assize between Thomas Brother and Emma widow of William of Huxham touching common of pasture in Huxham¹. In 1267 this same Emma paid a halfmark to have an assize before Bracton².

(2) No cases seem to have interested the annotator more Corbyn's than those which concern the demurrer of the parol. Be it then explained, that very often when an action for land is brought against an infant, the action will remain in suspense until the infant is of age; in technical phrase the parol (loquela) demurs (remanet); or to use another term of art. the infant habet etatem suum, has or is allowed his age, that is, he need not answer until he has attained majority³. Such is the case if the infant has come to the land as the heir of an ancestor who died seised as of fee. But according to Bracton stress must be laid on these words as of fee; for if, e.g. the ancestor came to the land as guardian in chivalry, then his heir though under age will have to answer at once to the suit of the ward who is being kept out of his inheritance. Again the parol may demur because a person who has been vouched to warranty is under age. As may well be imagined many difficulties occur in working out this general principle, for lords are given to dealing in unauthorized modes with the lands which come to them by way of wardship; the lord, for example, who has A's land will enfeoff X, then X will die and his infant heir Y will enter, and when A sues Y, then Y will assert that the parol should demur. Or again the feoffee of the lord, or that feoffee's heir, will, when sued, vouch the lord's heir, who will be an infant.

Cases in the Note Book which raised such points as these are freely annotated, and it seems plain that the annotator thought that some of them were wrongly decided. Apparently his inclination was to confine the privilege of infant tenants and vouchees within as narrow bounds as possible. Now against several of these cases he writes the name Corbyn. The following are the instances in which this name occurs.

Case 30. Assize of mort d'ancestor brought by Simon on the death of his mother Swanill against Margaret and Jacob. Margaret as doweress vouches Jacob who is an infant. Simon asserts that Swanill held of Jacob's father who on Swanill's death entered by intrusion ("by intrusion," says the annotator "for the tenement was held in socage"). Held that the assize should proceed. Against this case stands the name Corbyn.

² Excerpt. Rot. Fin. vol. 2. p. 458. ³ The demurrer of the parol for nonage was abolished in 1830 by 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, cap. 47, sec. 10.

Case 1722. Assize of mort d'ancestor brought by Richard Montacute on the death of his father William Montacute against Gilbert of Say, who vouches his own wife, who vouches Matthew of Clevedon, who vouches the infant heir of Drogo Montacute. Matthew claims under the deed of Drogo's father. Richard however alleges that Drogo's father obtained possession of the land in the character of lord and guardian on the death of William Montacute, Richard's father. Held that the assize must proceed without waiting for the majority of Matthew's vouchee. Against this the note is, Corbin de Ricardo de Monte Acuto.

Case 1827. Assize of mort d'ancestor brought by Eudo Fitz Walter on the death of his father against Randolph Braham who vouches Roger son of Earl Hugh the Bigod; Roger is an infant. Eudo alleges that his father Walter died seised in fee, and that under an agreement with William of Toftes who was Eudo's guardian, Earl Hugh intruded and kept the land. Randolph denies that Walter died seised in fee, Held that the assize must proceed. Against this case stands the note, Nota pro Corbyn quod etas non expectatur. Also the annotator has added this note—'To the same effect 'you have a case in the Suffolk Eyre of Martin Pateshull, 'A.R. 12. Ass. mort, antec. If Roger of Gloucester. There 'the age is not awaited of the heir of a chief lord, who made 'a feoffment while the very heir [of his tenant] was within 'age, but the assize was taken, saving to the feoffee the right 'to recover in exchange when the [lord's] heir should have 'attained full age. And the same ought of rights (de jure) to 'be observed when an alienation is made after a writ has 'been purchased by the very heir whether the very heir be 'under age or no.' These last words, it will be remarked, introduce a somewhat different topic, namely the effect of alienation pendente lite.

Case 1898. On the margin of a later page the case of Roger of Gloucester is copied from the Suffolk Eyre Roll. Assize of mort d'ancestor brought by John son of Roger of Gloucester against Richard Paide, who vouches William infant son of William de Ros. John alleges that Roger died seised and William de Ros the elder entered as guardian. No reply is made and the action is compromised. It would seem therefore that the annotator was mistaken when he said (in commenting on the case of Eudo Fitz Walter) that the assize was taken. This case is prefaced by the words, Corbyn. De warrantia ipsius qui est infra etatem.

We have then four allusions to 'Corbyn' and the context into which this mysterious word is introduced is always much the same. We turn to the places in which Bracton discusses the demurrer of the parol.

On f. 275 he cites the cases of Eudo Fitz Walter and Roger of Gloucester, and, like the annotator, treats the latter as an authority against the demurrer of the parol. But also on f. 269 b, he gives Eudo's case at length in such a context as to show that in his mind, as in the annotator's, the rule that the parol does not demur for the nonage of a vouchee whose ancestor entered merely as guardian, was closely connected with the rule about alienation pendente lite, the rule qui dolo desiit possidere pro possessore habebitur. Now in the Digby MS, the whole of this passage (twenty-four lines of the printed book¹) is in the margin, and has above it the words Casus Corbin. It would seem therefore that in Bracton's mind, as in the annotator's, this topic was connected with Corbyn's Case.

On the 10th of April 1260, Braeton was appointed to take an assize of mort d'ancestor between Richard Corbyn and Adam le Bel for land in the township of Montacute in the county of Somerset², on the 3rd of June in the same year to take a similar assize for land in the same township between Richard Corbyn and Ralph le Bel¹. Is not this the explanation of the four notes in the Note Book and of the note in the Digby MS.? I had hoped to make the answer more certain by finding Corbyn's case on a plea roll; in this I have failed; but it will not escape remark that all the cases in connection with which we have found Corbyn's name are assizes of mort d'ancestor².

Whitchurch.

(3) Against a case³ from 1219 we find Nota Whitcherche. The name which assumes the various forms of de Albo Monasterio, Blancmoustier, Blanchminster, Whitminster and Whitchurch, was not uncommon in the thirteenth century: but in that century a family of 'Blanchminster or De Albo Monasterio in some records called Whitminster' was seated in the parish of Stratton in Cornwall⁴, near the Bristol Channel and near the boundary of Devon. In 1261 Bracton was appointed to take an assize between Rannulf de Albo Monasterio and the Prior of Launceston for the church of Stratton⁵; from the next year we have a fine whereby Rannulf recognized the Prior's right to the church⁶.

Ralph of Arundell.

(4) The Note Book has a case⁷ in which a lord elaims wardship of the heir of a female tenant against the infant's father. The father pleads that he is tenant by the curtesy and that therefore no wardship is due. On this plea a day is given for judgment. Against this case stands a note :----

Casus Radulphi de Arundelle similis isti in Cornubia.

That the allusion is to a Cornish case needs no proof. A Ralph Arundell, who is regarded as the founder of the great Cornish house Arundell of Lanherne, was sheriff of Cornwall which one Walter Corbyn was plain-tiff. Coram Rege Roll, No 90, m. 16. ³ Case 25.

² This same Richard Corbyn, or perhaps it was another, seems about this time to hold a good deal of land in Devonshire, the manors of Lampford, Uppacot, Parkham and Bel-stone, Feet of Fines, Devon, No. 613. A.R. 54 (MS. Ind.) In 1253 Bracton heard an assize for common of pasture at Litlemore in Somerset in in 1260¹. He held the manor of Trembleth in St Ervan and in 1259 and 1262 was party to real or simulated litigation ending in fines². Moreover in 1254 and 1257 three different assizes in which he was engaged, all touching tenements in Cornwall, were brought before Braeton³.

We turn to that Bodleian treasure, the Digby MS. At the bottom of one of its pages we find without context the note Memorandum de casu R. de Arundelle. On this page there is nothing that we can connect with the case in the Note Book; but on the page next before it there occurs a statement that tenant by the curtesy is seised of the freehold, and so can bring an assize, though he is not seised as of fee: possibly then the note in the Digby MS. has wandered a little way from its proper place⁴. It seems the general opinion of Cornish antiquaries that Ralph Arundell owed his estates in Cornwall to his having married an heiress, the heiress of Trembleth. At any rate here again we find a link between the Digby MS. and the Note Book.

But further, at the very bottom of the first leaf of each of the five first quires of the Digby MS. may be seen the words Dominus Radulphus (in some cases Randulphus) de Ardell'. Then at the end of a later quire⁵ there stands a more eloquent legend, which I read thus :--- Mittuntur J. de bello prato septem peciae et dimidia subsequentes rubricam istam viz. quod non est camenda conuictio super conuictionem, et de illis tenetur respondere domino (a blurred word which may I think be Rad') de Arundell'.

The meaning of this seems plainly to be that the seven and a half quires following the rubric Quod non est capienda etc.⁶, are lent to J. de Beaupré, (probably in order that he may have them copied,) and that he is bound to answer Arundell. We may infer then that for them to Sir this very MS. belonged to a Sir Ralph Arundell. Beaupré again was a good Cornish name. In the fourteenth century Arundells and Beauprés marry into the same family, their souls are prayed for in the same church¹. What here concerns us is the connection between the Note Book and this MS. of the treatise; still it is interesting to guess that the latter, a MS. which gives us the treatise in what seems an exceptionally pure form, may be traced to the house of a man who was sheriff of Cornwall when Bracton took the Cornish assizes; but this trail must be followed by others.

Gorges.

(5) There is an appeal of mayhem²; the appellee did not appear and the sheriff returned that he was not to be found; thereupon the sheriff was directed to exact him in three county courts and inform the justices of the result. Against this is written Casus ipsius qui desponsauerat uxorem Radulfi de Gorges antequam dictus Radulfus.

This I believe refers to a case found elsewhere in the Note Book³. One Thomas of Bayeux carried off the king's ward Ellen daughter of Ivo of Morville and married her: the king had intended to give her to Ralph Gorges; steps seem to have been taken to outlaw Thomas and his accomplices (this is the point that the annotator takes:) when Thomas appeared it was adjudged that Ellen being an infant was not bound by the marriage; they were separated and she afterwards married Ralph⁴. This allusion therefore seems sufficiently explained by the Note Book itself; but it may be added that the family of Gorges gave its name to the manor of Braunton Gorges which lies in the same parish as that manor of Saunton which was once in the hands of Henry of Bratton, also that in 1258 and 1262 Bracton was appointed to hear assizes in which Ralph Gorges was concerned⁵.

Cole's case.

(6) Cole was, as it is, a common name, therefore when we find against a case *fere casus Cole*⁶ we learn little.

However in 1238 a Richard Cole held land in Cornwall. A fine is preserved which was levied between him and the Prior of Launceston touching the church of St Juliotts; another levied between him and William atte Hasse¹. In 1254 or thereabouts a Richard Cole was charged before Bracton with a disseisin done at Kadekeber' (Cadbury?) in Devonshire²; on another occasion a Richard Cole of Sebrittescot' comes before Bracton as a juror along with a Raleigh. a Tracey and others³. In 1262 one of the assizes which Bracton was commissioned to hear was brought against Martin Cole for land at Coombe in Devonshire⁴.

(7) Casus de Cornw⁵. A family which bore the name cornu. De Cornu was seated at Horwood a few miles east of Ralph de Cornu was sheriff of Devon in 1250⁷. Bideford⁶. In the same year Roger Le Cornu and Fina his wife paid a mark for an assize before Henry of Bratton⁸.

(8) Against a case⁹ illustrating the rules of descent, we winscot. have Nota Wynescot. There is a place called Winscot in the parish of St Giles in the Wood near Torrington, which gave its name to a family of landowners¹⁰. A Johannes de Wynescote appears several times on Bracton's two Assize Rolls, once as engaged in litigation touching common at Morchard Bishop¹¹; a Walterus de Wynescote is also mentioned¹²; but the case to which allusion is made in the Note Book has not been found.

(9) Against a case¹³ deciding that an infant is not bound Raleigh. by his fine, we have Nota casum Hug' fil' Wymundi de Ralegha primogenitum et postnatum qui fuit infra etatem de concordia inter eos facta coram H. de Brattona. There is no need here to prove that Bracton was concerned with the case to which reference is thus made. There is extant the foot of a fine¹ levied in A.R. 40, before the justices in eyre at Exeter between Wymund of Raleigh and Warin of Raleigh, whereby, (this early specimen of elaborate conveyancing is worth notice) Wymund recognizes land at Bolleham to be the right of Warin, to hold of Wymund and his heirs to Warin and the heirs of his body, and after his death if he die without issue, to Wymund younger brother of Warin and the heirs of his body, and after his death if he die without issue, to Reginald brother of Wymund and the heirs of his body, and after his death if he die without issue, to Richard brother of Reginald and the heirs of his body, and if Warin, Wymund, Reginald and Richard die without issue, then the land is to revert to Wymund of Raleigh and his heirs. In 1259 Bracton was commissioned to take an assize of mort d'ancestor between Hugh and Warin of Raleigh for land at Belham². This may well be the case to which the annotator refers. Again in 1265 Warin of Raleigh and Hawisia his wife pay a halfmark for an assize before Bracton³. That Bracton himself held land of a Raleigh has been shown above⁴.

(10) Nota de villanis Henrici de Tracy de Tawystocke qui nunquam fuerunt in manu Domini Regis nec antecessorum snorum et loquebantur de tempore Regis Eadwardi coram $W. de Wiltona^5$. This must allude to a case from Bracton's time: William of Wilton was just his contemporary; Tavistock, it were needless to say, is in Devon; Henry of Tracey sat as justice of assize along with Bracton, and was often appointed to deliver the gaol at Exeter. In 1279, as appears from a case in the Placitorum Abbreviatio⁶ the men of Tavistock were again disputing with their lord as to whether they were entitled to the protection given to tenants of the ancient demesne. Two records, as it seems, were produced against them, the earlier of which was a case before Bruce and Middleton justices of assize in the 47th year of King Henry (1262-3). I should suppose that the case before Wilton was yet earlier than this; much later it cannot have been, for Wilton was killed at Lewes on 14th May, 1264.

Even in imagination it is pleasant to walk in Devon. Geography We take the train to Barnstaple; Bracton was archdeacon of Barnstaple. The next morning we may stroll easily to Raleigh, the cradle of the great house, and so on through Heanton Punchardon and Braunton Gorges to Saunton the manor which Bracton held: we have left Bratton Fleming some six miles to our right. Crossing the Braunton Burrows, we may be ferried over the estuary of the Taw and Torridge to Appledore; and so to Bideford; there will yet be time to visit Horwood where the Cornus lived. If we would see Winscot we must go south to Torrington, and then a third day's walk will take us over the Cornish border to Stratton, the home of Blanchminsters or Whitchurches: the church there claims our notice; Rannulf Blanchminster and the Prior of Launceston fell out about it and Bracton heard the eause. Then our way will lie in pleasant places; one day along the shore to St Juliott's, pretending if we can that we are interested in the Prior of Launceston, for this church also he acquired from one Richard Cole. We are not far now from the home of Ralph Arundell. But let us cross the Bodmin moors; on their south-eastern verge near the Cheese Wring we find Tuckenbury, and we remember how the Raleighs gave Bracton the manor of Tykenbrede for his life. On to Tavistock, where the villeins of Henry Tracey quarrelled with their lord and relied in vain on Doomsday Book. Richard Corbyn's manor of Belstone we can reach next day; the way lies straight across Dartmoor; it is a wild way, but (teste meipso) there is none pleasanter in England. Of course we can go round by the high-road, and a detour, none too long, will take us through Broadwood Wiger and Bratton Clovelly. To Exeter will be no long walk from Belstone; we must enter the cathedral, seek the spot where they laid the body of Henry Bratton, where they prayed for his soul and the soul of John Wiger. At his tomb our pilgrimage might end; but if one day more can be spared, we will go through Huxham and Thorverton, find Punchardon in the parish of Kentisbere and catch the train at Tiverton. Montacute we might visit on our way back through Somersetshire, if we cared to see the scene of the 'Casus Corbyn'. Not far out of our track have lain Ash Reigney, Buckland Brewer, Bovey Tracey, Newton Tracey, Nymet Tracey, Colaton Raleigh, Combe Raleigh, Withycombe Rawleigh. Many questions are solved by walking; Beati omnes qui ambulant.

Summary.

These ten cases 'noted up' in the margin of the Note Book seem to supply a link of just the kind that was wanted. Our two writers not only select the same rolls, rolls of Pateshull and Raleigh, ponder over the same cases, hold the same juristic theories, use the same unusual phrases, but also are interested in the same counties, in the same set of people, Arundells, Punchardons, Traceys, Raleighs; they have personal as well as professional interests in common. If more be needed to make them one, perhaps it is that both should have been guilty of the same astonishing blunder.

The fifth Argument. The Baronial Nolumus.

Special Bastardy. The last point which can be discussed is of some curiosity, for it concerns the legitimation of bastards and that famous baronial Nolumus of which all have heard; but we must proceed cautiously and patiently, for we have to deal with an intricate question. The reader may be asked to keep two dates steadily before his mind, the 12th of October 1234, and the 23rd of January 1236.

The Statute of Merton. (1) The Statute of Merton as printed by the Record Commissioners¹ professes to have been made on the 23rd Jan. 1236, the morrow of S. Vincent in A.R. 20. It contains eleven chapters the subject matters whereof are as follows :—

- cap. 1. Damages in actions for dower.
 - 2. Widows may bequeath the crop on their dower lands.
 - 3. Procedure and punishment in case of redisseisin.

Approvement of common 4.

Usury shall not run against infant heirs. 5.

6. and 7. Ravishment of ward; valor maritagii.

Periods of limitation for divers writs. 8.

Special bastardy. 9.

Suit of Court by attorney. 10.

Imprisonment of those who trespass in parks. 11.

(2) There is no doubt that a parliament was held at How much Merton on the day just mentioned and that it enacted laws. Merton? On the other hand the evidence for the full form of the statute printed by the Record Commissioners is not first rate. This full form has not been found on any extant roll. Whether there was at this time or for many years afterwards a Statute Roll, is very doubtful. Legislative acts are often found on the Patent, Close, and Coram Rege Rolls. Thus the Provisions of Westminster are on the Close Roll; the ordinance touching leap year is on the Close Roll; instances of legislative acts found on Coram Rege Rolls will be given hereafter. The best evidence for the full form of the Statute is a comparatively modern MS. which professes to be a copy of a Statute Roll not now forthcoming; but substantially the same form is found in other old private MSS.

(3) The evidence against this full form is briefly this :- only part made at

(a) Writs directed to the sheriffs announcing the laws Merton. made at the Parliament of Merton are enrolled on the Close Roll under date 30th Jan. 1236¹. They mention chapters 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, but not the other chapters.

(b) Matthew Paris under the year 1236 gives chapters 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 11, but not the other chapters².

(c) The excellent Annals of Burton give as the laws made at Merton on the 23rd Jan. 1236, chapters 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 11, but not the other chapters³. Since chapter 11 does but report an abortive discussion about the right to imprison those found trespassing in parks, and declare that for the present there is to be no change in the law, the omission of this in the writ to the sheriffs is explicable.

(d) Almost certainly chapter 8 changing the periods of limitation was not enacted at Merton. It is not mentioned in the writ of 30th Jan. 1236. On the other hand a writ announcing this change to the people of Ireland is enrolled on the Patent Roll under date 20th March, 1237¹. Also the Annals of Burton give it as having been made on 5th Feb. 1237². Lastly our Note Book gives it among extracts from the Coram Rege Roll of A.R. 21 (A.D. 1237-8), which roll is not now forthcoming, and describes it as having been made at a general council held at Westminster in that year³.

The story of the Nolumus,

(4) The chapter (cap. 9) then with which we are concerned, the eelebrated chapter about the legitimation of bastards, stands in suspicious company so far as regards its date. But let us note the substance of it :---the bishops said that they would not answer the inquiry whether a person was born before or after the marriage of his parents, for this would be against the common order (contra communem formam) of the church; they then in their turn asked the barons to consent that children born before marriage should inherit; this request the barons met with the Nolumus. The discussion therefore was sterile; no law was made; therefore there was nothing to be published to and by the sheriffs; therefore the silence of the Close Roll, of Paris, of the Burton Annalist is not unnatural. For the sake of brevity I shall speak of the transaction described in this chapter as 'the Nolumus.'

The Ordinance of 1234.

(5) It is an indubitable fact that about bastardy there had been legislation some fifteen months before the parliament of Merton. This is proved by the Coram Rege Roll for A.R. 18-19, a roll still extant and extremely well dated. Under the heading Die Jovis proxima post festum S. Dionisii anno Regis Hen. fil. Reg. J. xviij, (St Denis is Oct. 9, a Monday in 1234, so this date is 12 Oct., 1234,) stands a provision made by the king, Archbishop Edmund, ten named ¹ Statutes of the Realm, vol. 1, p. ² p. 252. 4, from Rot. Pat. 21 Hen. 3, m. 10. ³ Case 1217. bishops, eleven named earls, and many barons named and unnamed. It is to this effect-When in the king's court it is objected to any that he is a bastard because born before the marriage of his parents, the plea is to be sent to the bishop to inquire whether he was born before marriage, or no. This in substance is all that is said; the terms in which the bishop must make his return to the writ are not expressly prescribed; there follows a provision against appeals, and a clause making the rule applicable to suits already pending as well as to suits not yet begun. I shall refer to this as ' the ordinance of 1234'.

(6) Supposing for a moment that the date of the Relation of the Nolumus Nolumus is uncertain, what we may ask is its relation to the to the Ordinance. ordinance of 1234? Now had we nothing but internal evidence to guide us, we might for a moment be inclined to regard the ordinance as a settlement of the dispute disclosed by the story about the Nolumus; the bishops gave way and consented to return a direct answer to the king's writ. But this doctrine would leave inexplicable the later practice of the king's courts, which did not send the issue of special bastardy to the ordinary; it could hardly be squared with certain letters which Robert Grosseteste bishop of Lincoln wrote to William Raleigh; it is flatly contradicted by an unquestionable authority. A few months after the Parliament at Merton an entry dated 9th May, 1236, was made on the Close Roll. This entry has been printed by Blackstone¹. It consists of a writ addressed to the Archbishop of Dublin and the Justiciar of Ireland. They have asked how to proceed in case of special bastardy. They are told that there was a question as to where such an issue should be decided; that in the year past (anno preterito) it had been ordained that the issue should be sent to the Court Christian; that afterwards however (postea vero processu temporis) the bishops finding that they were required to state specifically whether the person was born before or after marriage, (and not generally whether he was legitimate or no,) had protested that they could not do this; that consequently the issue was ¹ The Great Charter, Introduction, p. lvii., from Rot. Cl. 20 Hen. 3, m. 13 d.

for the future to be tried in the king's Court; but that whether it was to be tried by jury or by other proof was not yet determined. This seems to settle decisively the sequence of events. The ordinance of 1234 said that the question was to be sent to the ordinary; the bishops perhaps had hoped that they would be allowed to say merely 'This man is legitimate'; the king's Court would not be put off by this, would press the question 'Born in wedlock or no?'; then (almost certainly at the Merton Parliament) the bishops made an attempt to get the law altered; in this they failed; still they succeeded in establishing their refusal to answer the obnoxious question.

Grosseteste's letter.

All this agrees with the later practice and with Grosseteste's letters to Raleigh and to Archbishop Edmund. In one of his letters to the Archbishop there is a passage to the following effect :--- 'The king and his council are attempting 'to compel me to answer the question, whether a person was 'born before the marriage of his parents or no; I have 'refused to do this and have been cited before the council. 'Also the king and his council say that you along with the 'bishops, earls and barons of England, have consented to this 'form of question and answer. I beg of you to tell me, 'whether you did so consent. If you did, then what am I to 'do? If I answer the question, I fear to fall into the hands 'of the living God; if on the other hand I refuse to answer 'and you have consented to the form in which the question 'is put, I shall hardly escape from falling into the hands 'of men.' This letter was written after Grosseteste had been consecrated bishop of Lincoln, that is, after the 3rd of June, 1235; Dr Luard has assigned it to the year 1236 but it can not well have been written after the Nolumus. From it we may gather that the question had lately been debated and that, according to the contention of the royal judges, the bishops had then consented to answer the king's writ word for word, but that whether, in their own opinion, they had really consented to this, was not very clear, was at all events not well known to the newly consecrated bishop of Lincoln¹.

(7) Hitherto we have left Bracton out of account; when Bracton inverts the we turn to him our real difficulties begin. What he does is dates. this:-In the first place he tells the story of the Nolumus. His version is an expanded version of that which is in the Statute Book. He agrees with the Statute Book as to place and date. The debate took place at Merton on the morrow of S. Vincent in A.R. 20, that is 23rd Jan. 1236. So far all is well; but he immediately proceeds to say that afterwards on the Thursday next after S. Denis in the same year a provision was made by the king, archbishop, bishops, earls and barons. This provision we find to be an expanded version of the ordinance of 12th Oct. 1234. The day is rightly described as the Thursday next after S. Denis: but the year is wrong, wrong by two years. There can be no doubt that it is the ordinance of 1234 to which he refers; he gives a long list of the prelates and magnates who assisted at its making: this agrees with the list on the Coram Rege Roll; and though Bracton has handled his text very freely, still it is plain beyond doubt that the provision the substance of which he professes to give, is the ordinance of 1234.

(8) Clearly then as Selden pointed out there is a The mistake blunder in Bracton's text¹. The suggestion is ready to hand that this is a blunder of copyists or editors, and, though I have looked at many MSS. for a variant and none has appeared, one would be very willing to make a small conjectural emendation if this would mend the matter. But no little change would suffice, nothing short of the rewriting of a chapter. The text distinctly represents the ordinance as a settlement of the debate which had provoked the Nolumus. To make this the clearer the words of the ordinance have been tampered with, (as I shall show hereafter), so as to represent the bishops as definitely and expressly consenting to answer the question, 'Born before marriage or no?' Then, says Bracton's text, by reason of this common consent it is in the king's election whether to address this inquiry to the ordinary or to determine it in his own court. According to the authentic text of the ordinance the bishops did not consent definitely and expressly to answer word by word an inquiry so framed. Bracton's text is wrong and seemingly no small verbal change will set it right.

is Bracton's,

One other fact will however suggest that his memory (or his note book) had served him some trick about the proceedings of the parliament at Merton. One of the changes in the law made then and there was the change which enabled a dowager to bequeath the growing crop; this clause of the Statute is beyond suspicion. Bracton alludes to it but cites the Coram Rege Roll for A.R. 18—sicut patet de provisionibus apud Merton inter placita quae sequentur Regem Henricum anno regni sui decimo octavo¹. At times, then, he may have thought that the Merton Parliament took place in Jan. 1234, and therefore before the making of the ordinance about special bastardy.

The Note Book inverts the dates.

(9) Having seen what Bracton did, let us now see how the maker of our Note Book dealt with this same matter. He had the Coram Rege Roll for A.R. 18-19 in his hands. His marks may be seen upon it at this moment. He extracted many cases from it. We have in the Note Book a legislative provision touching the assize of darrein presentment which is taken from the front of one of its membranes. On the back of that membrane stands the ordinance of This also is copied into the Note Book 12th Oct. 1234. though in an expanded form. But before this stands the story of the Nolumus in almost precisely the expanded form in which Bracton gives it. For this the roll whence extracts are being made gives no warrant whatever. In the Note Book no date is assigned to the story, but the transaction is described as having taken place at Merton. Then the ordinance is introduced with Postea vero alio die. The maker of the Note Book therefore believed as Bracton believed that the ordinance came after the Nolumus; he ascribed both to 1234; Bracton ascribes both to 1236. This matter of bastardy finished, we have then in the Note Book more extracts from the same roll; the cases which are scored on the roll are duly copied.

(10) Let us now suppose that Bracton and the maker of Conjectural the Note Book were but one person. That person believed, the mistake. for some reason or another, that the famous discussion between bishops and barons took place before the publication of the ordinance. When his clerk under his eye was copying from the roll of 1234 and had come to the entry about bastardy, then to make matters clearer, he from some other source furnished that clerk with an account of the Nolumus. This was inserted to explain the ordinance which was then to be copied, and which was copied though not (as we shall see) without interpolations. At a later time this same person was using the materials that he had collected, was writing a treatise on the laws of England; his own Note Book puzzled him; he remembered that the parliament of Merton, at which the barons said Nolumus, was held on 23rd Jan. A.R. 20; how then could the subsequent ordinance have been made in A.R. 18? There was nothing for it but to change the latter date and to give the ordinance to A.R. 20. Unfortunately however A.R. 18 was the right date.

This of course is conjecture, the conjectural history of a muddle; the man who antedated the parliament of Merton, had afterwards to postdate the ordinance. He was persuaded erroneously, that the ordinance came after the fruitless debate at Merton; this being so, he could not get the dates straight though he tried first one expedient and then another.

(11) But the matter does not rest here. I have said The docuthat Bracton gives an expanded form of the ordinance and pered with. an expanded form of the story told in the Statute Book about the Nolumus. So does the Note Book, and in each case the version in the Note Book seems intermediate between Bracton's version and the original text. This may best be manifested by printing in each case the three versions in such a manner that comparison may be easy.

Here then are the three versions of the ordinance; (A) the genuine text of the Coram Rege Roll, (B) the text in the Note Book, (C) Bracton's text.

It seems to me fairly evident that the second of these versions marks a stage in the process whereby the third was evolved from the first; it agrees now with the one and now with the other. It agrees, for example, with the third in giving some important words about appeals from the ordinary which are not in the original document, introducing maxime and si de necessitate contingat appellari. It agrees again with the third as to the last clause, and the form in which they give it is not very intelligible. On the other hand it agrees with the first and not with the third in wanting the very material words which bind the ordinary to answer precisely the question 'Born before wedlock or no?' This is a serious interpolation. Did the bishops in 1234 distinctly bind themselves to answer this question? Their conduct in 1236 and Grosseteste's letters make it improbable that they did so. It seems much more likely that they did not fully understand what would be expected of them, that when they were pressed to answer the precise terms of the writ they refused and successfully maintained their refusal. One can not help for a moment charging Bracton with dishonesty in having tampered with the text of an important document; but the manner in which he inverts the dates of the two transactions shows, as it seems to me, that he had gone utterly wrong about this piece of history. Such a mistake made by a royal judge about events but twenty years old, may be very wonderful; but the mistake is there.

And now let us compare the three versions of the story about the Nolumus, (A) that printed in the Statute Book, (B) that given by the Note Book, (C) Bracton's.

	Hore again the version given in the Note Pool going

Here again the version given in the Note Book seems intermediate between what we may regard as the original document and Bracton's text; the mean agrees now with the one extreme, now with the other.

On the whole then, though it is very difficult to get to Summary as the bottom of this curious matter, it brings the Note Book bastardy. into close connection with Bracton's treatise. Both give similarly interpolated versions of two records; both invert the true dates of those two records; the mistake (for deliberate misrepresentation seems out of the question) is a very strange one; that two independent persons should have committed it, would be stranger still.

Ad judicium,

And now the question whether this Note Book was really Bracton's or no, must be left to the judgment of the learned world. An effort has here been made to state the evidence impartially; but of course I was happy in believing that his work was in my hands, and my eyes may have been shut to facts which made against this pleasant belief. What is now to be wished is that some one will go through the book with the design of showing that it is not entitled to the name under which it is here published. Some one fact established by him, might make worthless every argument drawn from the manifold coincidences : for instance, he might prove that the annotator has referred to events which happened after Bracton's death. But meanwhile and on the evidence here adduced, Bracton seems fairly entitled to a judgment, a revocable judgment. The treatise is absolutely unique; the Note Book, so far as we know, is unique; these two unique books seem to have been put together within a very few years of each other, while yet the Statute of Merton was noua gracia; Bracton's choice of authorities is peculiar, distinctive; the compiler of the Note Book made a very similar choice; he had, for instance, just six consecutive rolls of pleas coram rege; Bracton had just the same six; two fifths of Bracton's five hundred cases are in this book; every tenth case in this book is cited by Bracton; some of Bracton's most out-of-the-way arguments are found in the margin of this book, in particular that about the binding of land by warranty, that about the ejectment of a disseisor; the same phrases appear in the same contexts, Juste propter jus sed iniuste propter iniuriam, Nihil certius morte, nihil incertius hora mortis; Corbyn's case, Ralph Arundell's case are 'noted up' in the Note Book ; they are ' noted up' also in the Digby MS. of the treatise; with hardly an exception all the cases thus 'noted up' seem plainly to belong to Bracton's country, to affect persons whom Bracton must have known, Raleighs, Traceys, Gorges, Blanchminsters, Winscots, Arundells, Punchardons; lastly we find a strangely intimate agreement in error; the history of the ordinance about special bastardy and the Nolumus of Merton, is confused and perverted in the same way in the two books. Must we not say then that, until evidence be produced on the other side, Bracton is entitled to a judgment, a possessory judgment?

Et ideo consideratum est quod Henricus recuperauit seisinam suam, saluo jure cuiuslibet.

§ 8. Of Fitzherbert's use of the Note Book.

Whether this book was originally Bracton's or no, there The Note Book caune can be but little doubt that some two hundred and fifty years to the hands of Fitzafter its making it came to the hands of another very famous herbert. lawyer, of Chief Justice Sir Anthony Fitzherbert, who published his Grand Abridgement in 1514¹. Here again the evidence is the indirect evidence of numerous coincidences : but it is very convincing and should be briefly stated. If Bracton introduces, Fitzherbert closes one great period of English law, the age of the Year Books. A modern reader will probably turn the pages of this book with deeper interest, if he knows that from it Fitzherbert learned all, or almost all, that he knew of any law older than the days of Edward the First.

When already a great part of my work was done, I Exidence remembered having seen in the Abridgement a few cases from the reign of Henry the Third. It occurred to me to ask, Whence did Fitzherbert get these very ancient cases; did he really read the plea rolls, and if so what plea rolls; or had he Year Books earlier than any that have come down to us? I went through the Abridgement, took out all the cases of Henry's time and arranged them in chronological order². The result was very remarkable. Henry reigned ¹ Printed, it is said, by Pynson in 1514, then by Wynkyn de Worde (?) in 1516, then by Tottell in 1565. I have used the edition of 1565.

² I afterwards found that some one else had long ago done exactly the same piece of work; he made a table which is found in a MS. in the Cambridge Library, Dd. vi. 39. I have used his results to correct my own.

for 56 years; Fitzherbert had 207 cases from the first 24 years of the reign; only 7 from the last 32, and these 7 all from a single eyre, the Devon and Cornwall eyre of A.R. 47. Moreover the 207 cases fell into three groups, (1) cases for which Fitzherbert gave year and term, (2) cases for which he gave the year but no term, (3) cases for which he gave year and eyre. The first group ranged over the period beginning Michaelmas A.R. 2 and ending Easter A.R. 18. The second covered the regnal years 19 to 24 inclusive. It seemed then that Fitzherbert had consulted just the very De Banco Rolls, and just the very Coram Rege Rolls, which had furnished matter for the Note Book; for as already explained¹ the De Banco Rolls were terminal rolls, the Coram Rege Rolls were annual rolls. As to the Eyre Rolls, the case was not so clear; Fitzherbert seemed to have had a roll, or two rolls, from which the Note Book had no extracts. But at any rate here were facts which demanded further investigation; it remained to see how many of the 207 cases could be found in the Note Book.

I believe that every single one of them may be found there. In a table printed at the end of this Introduction I have endeavoured to show how this may be done. It will I think be allowed that in the vast majority of instances the case in the Note Book is certainly the case to which Fitzherbert referred; in a few instances this is more doubtful; sometimes the note in the Abridgement is very brief indeed and it would be impossible to say positively that one had found the corresponding record; but on the whole I have no doubt that all the 207 cases are in the Note Book.

It has been necessary indeed to suppose that Fitzherbert or his printer made some mistakes, not very many, in their references to years, terms and eyres; such matters are very apt to go wrong. But some of these mistakes are very instructive; they make it the more certain that the author of the Grand Abridgement was the possessor of the Note Book. The best example is this:—Scattered about in his book Fitzherbert has 8 cases professedly from Trinity term

A.R. 9; out of these 8, only 3 are to be found in the Note Book as of Trinity term A.R. 9; the other 5 are there, but as of Hilary term A.R. 17. This five times repeated mistake seems very odd, until one has seen that in the Note Book's capricious arrangement, Trinity A.R. 9 is followed immediately by Hilary A.R. 17; when this is observed the mistake is no longer odd, but the most natural thing in the world. There are several other errors of a similar kind due rather to the Chief Justice than to his illustrious printers. Some doubts were at one time raised in my mind by the apparent fact that he had three cases from a Stafford eyre of A.R. 12 and one from a Leicester eyre of A.B. 15, from which eyres, (if any such eyres there were,) the Note Book had nothing; but the last mentioned case is found in the Leicester eyre of A.R. 5, and the three others in the Suffolk eyre of A.R. 12; 5 has been changed into 15 and Suff. into Staff. One case we can easily see from the names of counsel concerned in it, belongs not to the reign of Henry, but to that of Edward the Third¹.

This is not all. Under the title Prohibicion, Fitzherbert has a continuous string of eighteen cases from Henry the Third's reign. The order in which they occur is the following:--A.R. 2; Mich. A.R. 4; Mich. A.R. 4; Hil. A.R. 6; Hil. A.R. 6; Trin. A.R. 6; Hil. A.R. 8; Mich. A.R. 13; Trin. A.R. 13; Mich. A.R. 15; Pasch. A.R. 15; Mich. A.R. 16; Trin. A.R. 9; Hil. A.R. 17; Mich. A.R. 18; Trin. A.R. 4; Hil. A.R. 5; Hil. A.R. 7. It is a curious order, with its interpolation of A.R. 9 between A.R. 16 and A.R. 18 and its leap backwards from A.R. 18 to A.R. 4. A curious order; but the order of the Note Book. There are several other instances of the influence exercised by the arrangement of the Note Book over the arrangement of the Abridgement; but this is the most perfect².

After weighing this evidence the reader will hardly doubt that our MS. came to Fitzherbert's possession, that he relied on it, studied it, used it largely. His 200 cases are found in from the record and not from a Year Book.

² See e.g. the titles Dower, Droyt, Essone, this collection of 2000. That this should be the result of chance is beyond measure improbable; there were hundreds of thousands of cases on the rolls of Henry the Third. And then why stop citing placita de banco exactly at Easter A.R. 18; why cite placita coram rege just from the years 19 to 24?

The last 32 years of the reign, as already said, are represented in the Abridgement by 7 cases all from the Devon and Cornwall eyre of A.R. 47. Of these I have nothing to say. It is plain that they were taken, not from a Year Book, but directly or indirectly from the record. Possibly Fitzherbert had come by a stray roll. There seems no reason for supposing that the lost end of the Note Book had cases from this eyre, an eyre of Bruce and Middleton which took place near the end of Bracton's life; the other 207 cases can be so satisfactorily accounted for, that the loss would seem to have happened before Fitzherbert's day. The appearance of these 7 lonely cases should not, as I think, detract from the force of the evidence stated above. They serve only to make the surrounding darkness visible, these 7 cases from 32 years, following 207 cases from 24 years. The author of the Abridgement would have gladly given more if he could have got them without much trouble; but the days when lawyers habitually studied the plea rolls, if such days there ever were, were long since past; the Year Books themselves were becoming an unmanageable mass; good luck and the splendid industry of the thirteenth century supplied Fitzherbert with a collection of cases from Henry the Third's reign; he used them. We may guess that the few French words scribbled here and there in the margin of the Note Book in a hand which seems to be a hand of Fitzherbert's day¹, were written by him; they are of no value, but just catch-words, showing under what title the case against which they are written might be arranged in an abridgement.

Influence of the Note Book upon Coke. For a second time therefore our Note Book entered into the history of English Law. Mediately through Fitzherbert it became one of Coke's main authorities, (the treatises ¹ See above p. 65.

of Glanvill and Bracton are the others,) for what was law before the days of Edward the First, his only authority for the case law of those days. One does not turn over very many folios of the Commentary upon Littleton without seeing a stray reference to some case of Henry the Third's reign. That is a reference through the Abridgement to this Note Book. To take one example-"A man" says Coke1 "shall be tenant by the curtesie of a house that is Cuput "Baroniae or Comitatûs: but it appeareth by 4 H. 3. Dower, 180, that a woman shall not be endowed of it." If the reader now cares to verify this citation he can easily do so. Turning to the table at the end of this Introduction he will find Fitzherbert's 'Dower 180' under A.R. 4, and will then be directed to Case 96 in the Note Book, where he will find the ultimate warrant for what Coke says. That Coke had studied at first hand the rolls of the thirteenth century, there are very few signs indeed; he was dependent on Fitzherbert and Fitzherbert was dependent on this Note Book. And so the labours of the copying clerks, the generous love for learning of him who set them their task and paid them their wages, bore fruit again and again; will bear fruit yet once more, for the history of English law will some day be written.

§ 9. Of the making of this edition.

It remains to describe the relation of the text here scheme of printed to the MS. at the British Museum. In the MS. the usual stenographic signs have been very freely used: I should guess that at least a quarter of all the words in the Note Book are in some way or another abbreviated. Many of these signs have a perfectly distinct meaning and give very little trouble to any one who has once learned their significance. But besides these the indiscriminating dash is largely employed to represent every kind of termination, more especially when the words are part of some common formula. Thus, Assisa venit recognitura is hardly ever written in full; instead of it one finds Ass ven rec; I believe that I have never but once seen the whole word recognitura. The one syllable rec is made to do duty for every voice, mood, tense, number, person, case of the extremely common words recognoscere, recognitor, recognito, recuperare.

Expansion of contractions.

Now it may well be urged that the fairest way in which to print the matter thus written is to use what is called record type, type imitating as closely as possible the various marks of abbreviation. Certainly that is the fairest way; but then it requires of every reader that he shall be instructed in an art which, though it is not really difficult, still can not be mastered without some trouble and practice. It might be wished that there was a large class of students so much interested in the history of law as to be able to read the original records readily and rapidly. But who will say that such a class exists? The fact is patent that for two centuries past extremely little use has been made of the invaluable plea rolls; also that extremely little use has been made, at least in this country, of those rolls of Richard's reign and John's, which Sir Francis Palgrave printed in record type¹. The old fables and fallacies are repeated; tenth-hand hearsay is preferred to first-hand evidence; it is so much easier to copy down as gospel truth what Coke said, than to face what one is like to call a repulsive mass of pothooks and hangers. An appetite for abbreviated documents may come in time; even record type may be pronounced unsatisfying; readers will not be content until they can see the very upstrokes and downstrokes reproduced by photography; but to suppose that such an appetite exists at the present day, would be a foolish dream; to provide food for it, would be waste of money.

Sources of error. Again, mistakes of the worst and most dangerous kind, no type however ingenious can prevent. The very commonest source of misreadings is the likeness between u and n, and between ui, ni, iu, in and m; such a word as minimum, if proof that he never saw a plea roll of earlier date there could not be. Bl. Com. vol. 3, pp. 317, 319. at all badly written, becomes a sore puzzle. The resemblance again between c and t is very fatal; in some hands and some combinations they are practically indistinguishable. An editor meets with a word which may be indiciis or may be iudiciis, which may be amita or may be amica. Here the type-founder can not help him; the context must tell him which word it is, and if there is any real doubt, he should state this in a foot-note. What is more, the stenographic signs are in general the very easiest things to read and to understand, and if one can not be trusted to expand them correctly one can not be trusted to copy them correctly. Take the common abbreviation of persona; one meets a p surmounted by a little a and with a line drawn through its tail, ß; the man who does not happen to know what this means, will probably think that the p is not a p. My belief is that the use of record type saves but few blunders of serious importance at the cost of deterring many readers.

Therefore in this edition an attempt has been made Λ warning to readers. to write out the words in full, except when so to do seemed really dangerous. I can not but suppose that I have made mistakes and therefore ought to warn the reader of the perils which he may run if he puts too much faith in what is here printed. Some instances shall be given.

Tenses and moods are often doubtful especially when the Difficulty as verb occurs in some common formula. Thus when a demandant is successful, it is adjudged quod rec' seisinam suam. Now in this context, when (which is seldom the case.) the word is written in full, I have seen recuperet and recuperat, but far more commonly recuperauit; it is adjudged, not that the demandant do recover his seisin, but that he has recovered his seisin; the judgment seems to recognize an already accomplished fact; therefore I have used the perfect indicative as the proper expansion of the ambiguous rec'. Tenses and moods in the common formulas the reader must therefore be asked to regard with some suspicion; I have attempted to find out from the best evidence, what the phrases really were, but the terminations may sometimes express a hasty inference from an insufficient induction.

Difficulty as to words.

In some instances it is very hard to find what was the exact form of some very common word. Just because it was so very common, it was never written in full. The word which stands for our substantive common (in such phrases as 'common of pasture', 'he claims common',) is a good illustration. One does not often see it in full; the form communia seems to have been used at a later time and is found in the printed law books; but it seems plain to me from clear examples that in Bracton's day the word was communa, and therefore communa I have printed. There is a similar difficulty about the word which our esplees translates; hardly ever will one find more than expl'. I have occasionally seen expletia or explecia, and this form seems ultimately to have prevailed in our Law Latin; but much more often have I seen expleta, and this I suppose to be the better and the older form. Having come across the word exhereditacio written in full, I fear that I may have used this form too often, and that in some instances it would have been better to print exhereducio. These are specimens of the doubts that have occurred to me.

Difficulty as to grammar.

Grammar too has been troublesome. In our Law Latin, for example, people are always coming to do this, that and the other, they come to make suit, to view the wound, to collect apples, to certify the justices, veniunt ad faciend' sectam, ad vidend' plagam, ad colligend' poma, ad certificand' justic'. I have been persuaded by numerous instances that in such cases the gerund was used, not the gerundive; that one ought to read, ad faciendum sectam, ad videndum plagam etc. ; but except in my first few sheets, I have left the word abbreviated when I found it abbreviated, and if I use the gerund it is because in the MS. the gerund is written in full. As another illustration of the verbal difficulties that have occurred, notice may be drawn to a curious use of the word perquirere. It begins by meaning 'to acquire', 'to purchase'; then it is specially used of purchasing an original writ, the first step in an action; A perquirit sibi breue de recto versus B; then this phrase is twisted and we find such forms as A perquirit sibi per breue de recto, and A perquirit se versus B; in short, the terms perquirere sibi, perquirere se become part of a technical slang, and they mean 'to bring an action'. It is sometimes difficult to expand the signs in which such slang is expressed. I have tried to be careful of small things. I have not said with the immortal Bartolus, 'De verbibus non curat jurisconsultus''; still I have felt with a vet more famous lawyer, that

> 'Law is the pork, substratum of the fry, 'Goose-foot and cocks-comb are Latinity.' 2

Some blunders in mediaeval etymology and grammar should be forgiven if the legal sum and substance of these two thousand cases are rendered with fair correctness.

Contractions being expanded, my endeavour has been to MS. printed reproduce what was in the MS. word for word, never altering word. what was there in favour of something which might be better grammar or better sense. Even glaring false concords and obvious clerical errors I have kept in the text suggesting a better reading in a foot-note, when of this there seemed any need. On the very few occasions on which for the reader's convenience an opposite policy has been adopted, express warning of this is given in a foot-note. When a word in the text is printed in italics this means that in the MS. it is indistinct or very doubtful. The first page of the MS. is sadly defaced; in my representation of it the words printed in italics and within brackets, stand for words which are almost illegible. When the first page is past, all goes pretty smoothly.

Again I have tried to preserve the spelling. Conse-spelling preserved. quently, for example, I have never used the diphthong ae but have left the simple e of the original. On the other hand I have not preserved the capricious use of capital letters, for this has no grammatical significance, but is a matter of mere convenience. So both u and v which are very indiscriminately interchanged are here represented by u; it seemed to me that greater fidelity would simply make unnecessary puzzles; but perhaps in this I was wrong. In expanding contractions I have sought to maintain the strain of spelling, but in some respects this varies from clerk to clerk and I may not always have succeeded in catching it. One may easily see, for example, that they usually wrote umquam instead of unquam; but whether they wrote numquam instead of nunquam is more doubtful, for this word is almost always abbreviated. But the most difficult problem is caused by the great similarity between the characters c and t, and the tendency of t in particular combinations to become c. For some clerks, one is inclined to lay down the rule, that whenever in a Latin word t is followed by i and then by another vowel, the t has become c; thus not only does one find as matter of course such forms as aduocacio, inquisicio, conuiccio, contradiccio, but the genitive plural of pars is clearly parcium and the perfect of peto is pecii. But this rule does not hold good for all writers; for example, the annotator of the Note Book seems generally to use twhere we should use it. Perhaps in the text here printed the c has been rather too freely used; but sometimes it is almost impossible to say whether a clerk has written peciit or petiit.

Local names.

Again the terminations of the names of places are so commonly abbreviated, (e.g. Ditton', Trumpinton', Hatfeld', Hatfeud', Winterburn', Watford', Wokindon') that often it is hard to decide whether what is omitted is a latinized termination, or a final indeclinable e. I doubt whether any universal rule could be laid down. Many of the larger towns certainly had declinable names, e.g. events take place apud Gloucestriam or apud Gloverniam; on the other hand it seems to me that some names were treated as indeclinable, e.g. those ending in ham; but about many of them I am doubtful and the reader should know of this doubt.

Punctuation.

As regards punctuation. Both the Note Book and the Rolls are punctuated; the dread of stops had not yet taken possession of lawyers; and the Note Book is often very stupidly punctuated, for the copyists did not care to understand what they wrote. For a while I thought that fidelity obliged me to reproduce their vagaries and I did not grow wiser until some sheets were beyond my control. After this I placed a few commas and full stops where I thought that they would be useful and called attention in foot-notes to any departure from the original which seemed of any importance. In general a legal record is quite unambiguous when all stops are omitted, and punctuation should be treated as of no authoritative value whatever.

The notes found in the margin of the MS. are printed in Marginal the margin of this book. It should be understood that all matters in the margin, except the 'marginal venues', were written by him whom I have called 'the usual annotator', unless something to the contrary is said in a footnote.

When this was possible I have collated my transcript Collation of Plea Rolls. of the Note Book with the rolls. What rolls are extant the reader may discover from a table at the end of this introduction. To indicate rolls which have been 'scored', and which therefore, as I infer, were used by the maker of the Note Book, I have employed the letter A: other rolls are referred to as B and C. A foot-note to the beginning of a case refers to the membrane of the roll on which it is found. The object of the collation was merely to discover whether the cases were on the rolls, whether they were copied with substantial accuracy, whether the roll would explain what the Note Book left unexplained. This is an edition of the Note Book not of the rolls; therefore I have not as a rule supplied what the maker of the Note Book systematically omitted, e.g. the names of unimportant persons, nor have I thought it expedient to notice variances except when these were of real legal importance. He was a lawyer and his book, whatever interest it may have for others, must in the main be a book for lawyers.

§ 10. Of some noteworthy cases in the Note Book.

Notable cases.

Cases of historic importance. By a few last paragraphs attention may be begged for some of the matters in the Note Book which seem the most noteworthy.

The record which shows how the outlawry of Hubert de Burgh and of the barons who took his part was reversed¹, may be welcome even to those who are not lawyers; and there are some other records which illustrate the struggle of 1233². A statement by the king's court in 1237 that Gualo the papal legate had been 'quasi tutor domini regis et custos regni' deserves remark³. There is a similar statement that Hubert de Burgh 'habuit regnum Angliae in manu sua'⁴. The latter occurs in a case touching the feudal relations between the king of Scotland and the king of England, a case which contains an emphatic statement of the doctrine of prerogative wardship. Four valuable entries concern the partition and therefore destruction of the most formidable outcome of English feudalism, the palatinate of Chester⁵; the difficulty of making a palatine earl answer out of his own palatinate, the ascription of palatine rights to the Earl Marshall, the demand for a judicium parium, the doubts of the assembled magnates over this unprecedented case, the rejection of foreign, presumably French, precedents, the reference to Roman or Canon law as a possible supplement for English jurisprudence, the afforcement of the court, the elaborately reasoned judgment, will not go unheeded; clearly these were important suits. One of these entries and another record⁶ here printed are Coke's oldest authorities, (he had them from Fitzherbert,) for the law as to the abevance of titles of honour⁷. There is a claim by William Longsword to the earldom of Salisbury, or perhaps to a hereditary shrievalty of Wiltshire¹, and there are several cases which turn on the doings of Henry Fitz Count who had asserted a right to the county of Cornwall and issued writs in his own name². Traces of that great disseisor Fawkes of Breauté, are not far to seek ; William Marshall the younger offers a thousand marks for the privilege of fighting him³. The court suspends its sittings in order that William of Albemarle may be besieged and suppressed⁴. Law has to recognize that a tempus guerrae is not uncommon.

That a large mass of material for the history of many Family famous families is here printed for the first time, will history. perhaps in the eves of some be the best point of this book. Title is often pleaded from the days of Henry the First, and the Norman Conquest is still the period of prescription,

Some of the pleas which followed the king are of special constitu interest as showing the action of the royal court where royal rights are concerned. Whether the king can be compelled to warrant his gifts seems a moot point, or rather a political question of grave moment⁵. It seems probable that he does justice in person and decides debated problems. If the second husband is tenant by the curtesy, it is because the king does not wish to change the ancient custom of England⁶, though Segrave held that this custom was unreasonable⁷. If the king's rights are concerned, his pleasure must be taken; he has no superior, he cannot be summoned, none may give him orders; therefore no action will lie against him⁸. His council, which is now becoming a definite body, supervises the administration of the law. Justices in evre are summoned before the king's council and the justices of the bench, and are amerced for having hanged a man unlawfully⁹; the justices of the bench themselves have to come before the council and answer for their mistakes of law; they plead that they knew no better¹⁰. The open sale of justice is becoming a thing of the past; but there are sundry procedural advantages for the grant of which a mark or demi-mark is expected, and occasionally heavy sums are offered and accepted, even a thousand pounds¹.

Courts Christian.

Communal Courts.

The relations between the spiritual and the temporal jurisdictions are brought out by a copious supply of 'prohibitions'. The lay court seems to have spent a very large part of its time in preventing the Courts Christian from doing business, in watching jealously their interferences in case of breach of faith (luesio fidei), their efforts to sanction wills of land². One may see here in detail the grievances of which Grosseteste and churchmen of the straiter sort complained-not real grievances according to Bracton; but Bracton, if an ecclesiastic, was first and foremost a royal judge". More valuable yet are the glimpses we get of the feudal and communal courts, especially of the latter. The county courts are busy, largely attended by the freeholders of the shire, who have to sit there as judges and make the judgments. The work is burdensome, but judgments cannot be made by the sheriff; the work is hazardous, for disappointed litigants are apt to complain to the royal court, and then four knights must repeat the record of the county court, and if it be contradicted, then the county will have to fight for it by the body of the county champion⁴. For all manner of purposes four knights of the shire are employed, they must ride to see whether a sick man has appointed an attorney, whether an essoince is actually in bed without his breeches; the day seems, (and of course really is,) near at hand, when knights of the shire will represent the shire in a parliament. Nor will it escape us that all sorts of private men had to labour much and journey far in the work of justice. Notwithstanding the Great Charter⁵, notwithstanding an occasional use of the nisi prius⁶, four knights, twelve jurors, are constantly wanted at Westminster, and come they must from the furthest corners of the kingdom. is of men thus drilled to do justice that parliaments can be made¹.

A little can be learnt even of the procedure in the local Procedure. courts, procedure by suit and compurgation and battle, a procedure which knows nothing of that new-fangled royal institution, the jury. 'Who shall go to the proof?', and not 'Who has proved his case?' was the question which perplexed the hundred court of Sonning". When Edith of Wackford vindicated stolen swine in the manor court at Windsor, she held one of the pigs in her hand³. But in the king's court itself trial by jury was still struggling with trial by battle and with compurgation. Wager of law was still permissible within a large, though always narrowing, sphere⁴. Many records bring home to us the reality of that production of suit, which even in our oldest Year Books is fast becoming an unreality⁵. One cannot as a general rule put oneself upon one's country to prove an assertion without first (as we should say) 'making a prima facie case' by the testimony of sectatores. Especially in cases relating to dower, it is so common for the judges to decide disputed questions of fact upon the testimony thus produced, and without the use of a jury, that the Note Book may leave us wondering at the very complete victory that trial by jury gained over 'trial by witnesses ". The many cases about suit and wager of law will help towards the understanding of several passages in our later legal history, and so will the many cases which place suit alongside charter or writing (carta, scriptum) as the known modes of evidence, and contrast them with nude parol (simplex dictum, simplex loquela, simplex vor). We may be led to doubt whether the judges of this age regarded a seal as having any mysterious virtue ; on the other hand the practice of collating seals may help us to understand how a rule of evidence became a rule of substantive law¹. The judges can tell the date of documents by the appearance of the wax; one who was bold enough to forge an original writ without first mastering the style of the Chancery is detected and hanged out of hand in a singularly summary fashion². Forgery, and the fraudulent use of seals are, one observes, not uncommon, and the religious houses profit by death-bed gifts of questionable validity.

Parties interrogated. The court's habit of interrogating the parties or their attornies, of thus eliciting fatal admissions and saving the trouble and cost of trial, may seem very rational to us and perhaps very strange, though Coke has noticed it³; and we may be surprised at the ease with which third parties intervene of their own accord or are summoned to declare whether they claim any right. It will perhaps be doubted whether the history of legal procedure has been the history of an unbroken progress, whether the necessary growth of a class of professional lawyers if it did much good, did not also some harm.

Archaic customs,

customs.

A few curious archaisms appear from time to time. Of certain tenants in Kent it is written, "if one of them has a child born in fornication he shall pay childwyte, and if any married man has a son born in adultery he shall be in the king's mercy for all his movables, and if one of them sheds blood he shall pay blodwyte4". In Herefordshire, it seems, they still pay and receive the wergild of the murdered man and hold this ancient custom dear⁵. All this while Bracton is speculating about the animus possidendi and writing his enlightened sentences. On the whole, however, we hear less of local customs than might be wished; they were rapidly disappearing before the common law of the king's court. The attachment of the men of Kent to their traditional usages is well marked and is very interesting. There is question whether a Kentish widow loses her dower by a second marriage; knights of the shire intervene to pray that the liberties and customs of the county may be respected¹. There is question whether Kentish land escheats for felony; the parties put themselves on the judgment of the justices and eight knights of the shire: the knights declare that they had never known a case of any Kentish knight being hanged, but that undoubtedly in gavelkind there was no escheat for felony *secundum legem Kantiae*². For some cause or another the county spirit seems to have been stronger in Kent than elsewhere³.

Land law, which feudalism would make the foundation Land law. of all law, naturally fills a large space. The actual working of the military tenures will be much better seen in these records than in the Year Books, for feudalism is on the wane before the Year Books begin. Much that is quite new is not to be expected, for the land law was so vastly important that the main outlines of its history were carefully preserved in legal tradition; but numberless points are here set in clear light; thus the lord's right of marriage as it was before the Statute of Merton is well illustrated. Subinfeudation was going on apace and giving rise to intricate problems; especial notice may be taken of those arising out of the rule that the same person cannot be both lord and heir. A series of records which goes far behind the Quia Emptores should be valued by all who wish to understand the practical meaning of that statute. We might wish to read more of that forerunner of the estate tail 'the fee conditional at common law', for much that is written in later books 'about it seems hardly better than guesswork⁴. Certainly it was a quite common thing that land should be given to a man and the heirs of his body, still commoner that land should be given in maritagium⁵. Several points may be

⁴ So far as I can discover Coke (and when one has said Coke one need not mention later lawyers), had no authority for anything that he said about conditional fees older than the statute which changed them into 'estates tail', except only the case which I here print as 61 and which he had from Fitzherbert, Formedon, 64.

⁵ Index Marriage portion, Estates, Fee conditional, I do not speak of made clear by this book, but the exact extent of the tenant's nower of alienation does not come out very plainly. It should be remembered the whole learning and even the very conception of 'estates' belongs to a later time: Bracton had not the word 'estate', nor any equivalent for it. Also it should be remembered that but a short time back the man who held land to him and his heirs could by no means always disappoint his heir apparent'. Just a trace or two of this we may find, but on the whole it belongs to the past; the heir apparent may be disinherited. As against the lord freedom of alienation, (in favour whereof Bracton argues with unusual earnestness³,) seems very perfect, and we look in vain for cases to show that the restrictive clause in the charter of 1217 had any considerable effect: we may well doubt whether the king's justices thought well of that clause or of some other clauses in the charter⁴. Primogeniture is extending itself rapidly, but there does not seem to be any very definite presumption against the partibility of socage land, and much of it is still partible⁵. The so-called 'Borough English' custom is regarded as a mark, though not a complete proof, of villein tenure⁶.

Possession and Property.

The operation of the possessory assizes may be seen in abundant examples. Probably we shall think well of the novel disseisin, a true possessorium, which worked speedily and effectively. The notion of seisin is firmly grasped; the parties, the jurors, are pinned down to the question whether there has been seisin and disseisin, and, if so, there must be no talk of proprietary right. Taking up at this point the frank-marriage because not every maritagium is liberum. This term frank-marriage has been used so as to confuse (as we should now say) the nature of a tenure with the nature of an estate. As to grammar, tenere in maritagium, in dotem etc. are far more common than tenere in maritagio, in dote etc. ¹ Glanvill, Lib. 7. c. 1.

the restraint on alienation. Gifts in mortmain were freely made as one may see from almost every page of the book. The Statute de Viris Religiosis begins with a reference to an earlier provision; this is not, as often supposed, a reference to the charter of 1217; it is a citation of the Provisions of Westminster of 1259 cap.

history of the so-called' 'real actions' we find them no such inextricable tangle as they afterwards became. On the one hand there stands the proprietary action, the writ of right, which ought normally to be tried in the lord's court, which must at any rate be begun there. It leads to battle or the grand assize and is a very slow and solemn affair. On the other hand there are the rapid royal remedies whereby Henry the Second cast his kingly protection over the seisin of every freeholder, very summary remedies indeed. The interval between these extremes is being filled up gradually, by writs of entry devised to meet cases in which the assizes will not lie, but in which some definite flaw of recent date can be found in the tenant's title, e.g. though no disseisor, he has come to the land through or under a disseisor, or he is a tenant holding over after his term has expired, or he acquired his seisin from a dowager, from a husband who alienated his wife's inheritance, or again his feoffor was a guardian, an infant, or of unsound memory. In theory, it may be, there is here an extension of the roval protection of possession. Feudal principle, the words of the Great Charter², forbade the king's court to make itself a court of first instance for the trial of proprietary right, save when the tenant held immediately of the king. Hence the elaboration mistory of of these writs of entry; hence also the fetters which confine actions. them: they can only be used when the flaw in the title is recent, and when there have not been more than two subsequent alienations or transmissions. When William Raleigh invented the writ of cosinage³ as a supplement for the mort d'ancestor, there was 'contencio inter magnates' over it ; for some held that it was against the Charter; Braeton had to argue that they were wrong⁴. A gradual process by which the king's court makes itself (practically, not theoretically, no not until 1833⁵.) the one court of first instance even for proprietary causes—this seems the main clue to the history of the real actions. In this book we may pick up the thread. It is hopeless to attack the matter in the Year Books without a training in earlier law; the material has become much too complex; a beginning must be found when as yet the writs of entry were novelties and the proprietary writ of right was still sharply opposed to the possessory assizes¹. This sharp contrast is emphasized by the large mass of litigation about advowsons and presentations which is here published. It may be repulsive to the modern reader, but if he is in earnest with legal history he may be asked not to shirk it, for in studying it he may acquire a tight hold of the idea of seisin. The intrusion of that all pervading idea even into the region of marriage will not escape him².

Uses, common, villeinage. In the eyes of a few connoisseurs the gems of this collection may be two cases which seem to show that feoffments to uses are as old as the days of Henry the Third³. Perhaps the cases which will find most readers (if indeed any of them be read at all) will be those about common rights and those about villeinage. As to common rights, the typical struggle of the time is not a struggle between lord and commoners, but a struggle between the men or the lords of two different townships. The social and economic position of the villein we are beginning to understand from the monastic cartularies, but to fix his legal position we must have litigation in the king's court, and this desirable end some of the many cases here printed should certainly serve.

Hopes.

Lastly there are two tasks which should be undertaken without much delay. In the first place Bracton's treatise ought to be carefully and lovingly edited. If this be not done by an Englishman, it will be done by a foreigner, as it is written, Vocabo super eos gentem robustam et longinquam et ignotam cuius linguam ignorabunt⁴. In the second place the history of English law, at least from the thirteenth century downwards, should be thoroughly well written. That both these great works will be made easier by the Note Book, I make no doubt; that this edition of it may not be too bad to be useful, has been and yet is my hope¹.

¹ In the summer of 1885 the case of Bidder v. Bridges came before Mr Justice Kay. 1t was an action for common rights over land at Mitcham in Surrey. Mr R. E. G. Kirk, the record agent of the plaintiff commoner, in the course of a long and laborious search for documents, found in a cartulary of Merton Priory a copy of the assize here printed as Case 1284. He then found the same case in the Note Book. The roll being lost, it was desired to put these copies in evidence. Mr Kirk found that I was engaged in transcribing the Note Book and collating my transcript with such rolls as were extant. I was therefore subpoenaed as a witness and stated what I then knew as to the general accuracy of the extracts in the Note Book and as to the marks on the rolls; of course I was not asked anything about Bracton. Kay J. decided that the copy could not be received as evidence and the action was dismissed. The plaintiff appealed, but unsuccessfully; I was not present in the Court of Appeal; I believe that there was some talk about the book and that the Lords Justices looked at it; but whether the question of its admissibility was determined, I do not know. The decision of Kay J. is reported, 54 L. T. 529; 34 W. R. 514; but I have not been able to find any report of the proceedings in the Court of Appeal.

END OF INTRODUCTION.

Postscript.

I HAVE said on p. 7 that Britton and Fleta carry their accounts of the writ of right to the point at which Braeton stops short. This is true of Fleta, but not of Britton; he does not get so far. As to the incompleteness of his book and of Braeton's also, see Nichols, Britton, vol. 1. p. xlv. It is very remarkable that we have no account of the duel and the grand assize later than that given us by Glanvill.

As regards the manor of Tykenbrede which Bracton held for his life (p. 16) see Case 1151 in which a Ralph of Tykambreche is mentioned. I cannot find any place in Cornwall with which to identify it other than Tuckenbury, the termination of which name may, as it seems to me, be a rationalistic perversion by English mouths of something Celtic.

On pp. 50, 51 I have said that there are but three occasions on which Bracton notices a difference of opinion between Segrave and any other judge, that once the difference is between Segrave and Pateshull, twice between Segrave and Raleigh. I now see that on f. 438 where Bracton speaks of Segrave's doctrine about the second husband's curtesy, he does not say that the opposite opinion was held by Raleigh. My statement therefore would be more correct if it ran thus:—"Once the difference is between Segrave and Pateshull, once between Segrave and Raleigh, and once Segrave is represented as holding that the law has been misunderstood and perverted." It seems clear that Segrave's opinion as to curtesy did not become law. See Case 1182, also the Statute de Donis and Coke's comment thereon, 2 Inst. 336, 8 Rep. 35 b.

On p. 76 I have said that Bracton apparently had three De Banco rolls from which there are no excerpts in the Note Book, but that this number might perhaps be reduced were the manuscripts examined. I believe that I can reduce it by one. In the first four manuscripts at which I look (MA, MB, MC, MI) the case which the printed book (f. 342 b) cites from Hilary A.R. 16, is cited from Hilary A.R. 18. I have not however been able to get rid of the citations from Trinity A.R. 5 and Trinity A.R. 7.

As regards Cole's case (p. 100), it may be observed that one Roger Cole was a canon of Exeter in 1224, see Case 920.

TABLE THE SECOND.

TABLE SHOWING BRACTON'S CITATIONS IN CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER.

NOTE: The object of the following table is to show (1) what cases Bracton eites, (2) whether they are in the Note Book, (3) whether there is any extant roll on which they are or ought to be found. The citations are arranged in four classes,

- A. Pleas in the Bench.
- B. Pleas which followed the King.
- C. Pleas in the Eyres.
- D. Undated or otherwise imperfectly cited cases.

The numbers in the first column refer to the folios of Braeton's Treatise; those in the last column to the Cases in the Note Book.

1222, A.R. 6. Eyre of de Burgh and Pateshull in Norfolk.

Cases in Note Book 1791-1807.

No commission found. Bracton cites two of the cases which are in the Note Book (1798 and 1803) as from Pateshull's eyre in Norfolk A.R. 10, of which eyre no other trace has been found. De Burgh was at Norwich from 13 to 23 Sept. 1222 (Rot. Cl. vol. I. p. 510—1).

1225, A.R. 9. Eyre (general commission of assize and gaol delivery) of Pateshull in Hampshire.

f. 28.	Anon. Gift shortly befor	e death.	1876
f. 260 b.	si Walterus Chamlenger.	Assize taken on default of warrantor.

¹ The case is cited without any year being mentioned. I can not find that Pateshull visited Norfolk in A.R. 9, but the commissions of that year are the only general commissions of assize and gool delivery that I can find. Bracton's mode of citing implies that the case is not from an eyre ad onnia placita. ² Cited from Leicester, but this must be a mistake.

 ⁴ Ascribed to 47 Edward 111.; but probably from this cyre.

- NOTE :—It is difficult to classify the English forms of action according to any one principle, because the traditional classification has undergone many gradual changes, e.g. an action which one age called 'real', another called 'personal' or 'mixed'. In making this Index I have thought more of the convenience of modern readers than of the legal logic of Bracton's day. Proceedings are here arranged under twelve heads :—

 (i) Writs of Right, (ii) Dower, (iii) Writs of Entry, (iv) Assizes of Novel Disseisin and of Nuisance, (v) Assizes of Mort D'Ancestor, Nuper Obiit, Cosinage, (vi) Assizes Utrum, (vii) Assizes of Darrein Presentment, Quare impedit etc., (viii) Miscellaneous Proceedings, most of which are reckoned in later days as real or mixed actions, but some of which are closely allied to trespass, (ix) Personal Actions, including actions on Fines and Warrantia Cartae, (x) Criminal Proceedings, (xi) Proceedings of an Appellate Character, including Attaint, Error, False Judgment, etc., (xii) Prohibition.
